Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether this proposed bridge is above the falls at St. Paul, or whether it is below?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is 100 miles above.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any work been undertaken toward the construction of it at the present time?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that this bill was passed several years ago by Congress, but owing to the outbreak of war it was impossible for the county commissioners to secure the necessary material. They have just got the material, and they are anxious to get the time extended in which to commence construction of the bridge.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume there is not much navigation on the upper part of the Mississippi?

Mr. KNUTSON. There is not a particle, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I want to inquire of the gentleman if the War Department recommends this favorably?

Mr. KNUTSON. It has taken its regular course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KNUTSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized.

ADMISSION OF FOREIGN SHIPPING TO COASTWISE TRADE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to press for consideration the following bill—

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The other gentleman from Missouri objects. Objection was made to the gentleman from North Dakota talking.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman should not object. I have no objection to the gentleman from North Dakota proceeding, but this is a matter of vital importance. It is a war-emergency matter. I do not think the gentleman ought to stand in the way of it. I am sure if the gentleman will consult with well-informed gentlemen on the other side he will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] objects.

Mr. MEEKER. If the gentleman from North Dakota can get a hearing, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable on either side. Every Member has the right to object to every unanimous-consent request asked, and nobody has the right to dispute it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My colleague says he will withdraw his objection. I think he ought to have that privilege.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS] withdraw his request?

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a perfect right to withdraw it. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Objection to what, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. To the consideration of the bill that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has in charge.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has not been submitted.

The SPEAKER. It is the bill (H. R. 6175) giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I assume that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], as he stated yesterday, will grant liberal debate upon this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly. There is no disposition not to do it.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me, so that I can renew my request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, how long will the general debate continue?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have an hour under my control, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], representing the minority side, has an hour under his control.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow us some time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is on the House Calendar. There is no general debate recognized under the rules of the House in the consideration of a House Calendar bill. When the request was submitted yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri, I was under the impression that this was a Union Calendar bill, and that general debate would be in order. There should be some understanding. Members of the committee should not be misled. If we grant consent to the consideration of this bill, there will be no opportunity for general debate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I supplement that request by the further request that general debate on this bill be limited to two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by myself and the other half by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not consent to that unless the debate is confined to the bill. General debate is threatened, which means trouble this afternoon, and we might as well have an understanding as to what general debate means. Gentlemen can bring up questions of personal privilege or questions affecting the dignity of the House at any time, but I shall object to any further speeches under the guise of a merchant-marine bill or otherwise—speeches affecting personal controversies. If the gentleman from Missouri will modify his request so that if there is general debate it shall be confined strictly to the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman had been a little more patient, I would have included his proposition in my request. My request, Mr. Speaker, is that the bill be given present consideration; that the general debate be limited to two hours and that the debate be confined to the subject matter of the bill; one half of the time to be controlled by myself and the other half to be controlled by the ranking minority Member in attendance, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman limit his request so that general debate may be confined to the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He does.

The SPEAKER. That is the request.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sure that anybody who is interested in the successful prosecution of this war and who recognizes the prevailing conditions at present with respect to our ocean tonnage will not object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that as well as the gentleman does, but if the gentleman wants a certain controversy raised under the guise of general debate—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri specifically states that the general debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill. If I should be presiding over the House at that time and that request is granted, I will enforce it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to submit a request in addition to the request of the gentleman from Missouri. It is that I may be allowed to proceed for five minutes out of order, and speak of the character of the designs submitted by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy Department, in order to call to the attention of the House the desire of the war industries board to take over the Supplies and Accounts Bureau of the Navy Department, which I do not think should be done, which naval officers do not think ought to be done, and which I think that very important committee of the Council of National Defense thinks ought not to be done. I would like to talk for five minutes in connection with that particular thing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At what time—after the conclusion of this?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; before.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to that, but I hope the gentleman will allow my request to be acted upon.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will withhold my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 6175, and couples with that the request that the general debate shall not exceed two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], and that the general debate be confined to the bill itself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may now proceed for five minutes out of order and that my five minutes be not taken out of the time on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] asks unanimous consent at this time to proceed for not exceeding five minutes about a matter pertaining to the Navy.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why can not the gentleman debate that under the five-minute rule on this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. It would be out of order then.

Mr. BRITTEN. That would be out of order, and also it is a matter that ought to be called to the attention of the House now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to get five minutes to say something about bituminous coal, and if I can not get it in the general debate I will object.

The SPEAKER. Object to what? Two hours general debate have already been agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois. But during the debate on this bill under the five-minute rule can I not obtain five minutes and use it on the subject of bituminous coal?

The SPEAKER. If anybody raises the point of order, the Chair will be compelled to rule it out. The five-minute debate is devoted, or supposed to be devoted—sometimes very erroneously supposed—to the pending amendment; but expressing his own personal opinion, the Chair does not think the gentleman will have any trouble in getting five minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I believe I forgot to include in my request the substance of what I said before, that this is purely of a complimentary character, and I want to call the situation to the attention of the House. It is an active condition that is now preparing a change between the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Navy Department—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend a moment, the Chair will try to get him the five minutes he desires, and then he can make his speech. [Laughter and applause.] Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] for five minutes, to talk about some matters connected with the Navy Department? The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, for some three or four weeks past there has been in controversy the question of taking over by one of the boards of the Council of National Defense the war industries board of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy. The desire of the Council of National Defense seems to be to take over entirely the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy. A newspaper report a few days ago said that at first the Secretary of the Navy was opposed to the idea of making this change, and then it was later stated that he had begun to waver and that now he was likely to permit this very valuable organization to be ignored or wiped out of business entirely by the war industries board.

When the declaration that a state of war existed was passed in the House the Army had a very small organization, entirely incapable of handling the tremendous leap from a small Army and small supplies to the caring for several million men in the field, and they readily consented to the practical abolition of their little organization and its work was taken over by the war industries board, now practically making many purchases. It is not my intention to criticize the war industries board to the slightest degree. I do know that some of the other boards composing the Council of National Defense have acted very loosely. I know that brothers of certain board members have received contracts for millions and millions of dollars on a percentage basis; but that condition does not apply in the Navy Department. Members of Congress, like my friend here, Mr. TALBOTT, who has been on the committee a long time, know more about the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts than I do.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] will tell you that the bureau is probably the most efficient organization of its kind in the entire Government service. At the time the war broke out there were 33 members in the purchase division of this bureau. They enlisted 75 Naval Reserves of all characters, chemists, experts in many directions who were enrolled in the service, at very small salaries, so that to-day they have 121 members in that purchasing department of supplies and accounts, and while they have been spending I might almost say thousands of millions of dollars for the Government, no one has yet pointed a finger at that particular bureau any more than at the Bureau of Yards and Docks under Admiral Harris. Rear Admiral McGowan, who is so ably assisted by Paymaster Peoples, is responsible for the coordination of these forces being brought from various parts of the United States, is at the head of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. The chairman of the war industries board, Mr. Scott, whose name was mentioned a while ago here on the floor of the House, will say, I think, that there is no organization in Washington that can compare with this bureau.

Mr. MEEKER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. MEEKER. It is right on this point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; with no desire to be discourteous to my friend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. If those of you on this, the Democratic, side of the House who are as interested in the Navy as I am will inquire among your friends in the Navy Department and in the Council of National Defense, who are not biased, and if you will ask them whether the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts should be wiped out of existence, they will tell you no, that it would be a very dangerous thing to do, and I hope Secretary Daniels will not permit that condition to exist. Admiral McGowan has experts in chemistry, experts in leather, experts in textiles, experts in everything that the Navy buys, some of these things being of a very delicate and intricate character that the Navy Department knows all about and that these gentlemen on the war industries board, who are lawyers and who are connected with the American Federation of Labor and other institutions, know nothing about, such as gyroscopes and other things that the Navy has to buy and for which reason this bureau should be conserved. Men who have been getting $10,000 and $20,000 a year are in Admiral McGowan's department working for a mere song, helping the war spirit along, and doing their bit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit me a statement?

Mr. BRITTEN. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. I am very much interested in what the gentleman says, and I want to say that yesterday I wrote the Secretary of the Navy, asking him not to give up the purchasing bureau of the Navy Department.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am very glad to hear that, and that is the object of the few remarks I have made, to call to the attention of this side of the House particularly what might occur, and which I hope the Secretary will not permit.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will, gladly, to my good friend.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am very much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, and especially to the high and deserving tribute paid the department presided over by Admiral McGowan. I do not think there is, however, any serious ground for apprehension that the Secretary of the Navy will for a moment suffer the activities of that department, the efficiency of which he so fully recognizes, to be hampered or interfered with, and I think I have very reliable information to that effect. However, I think it well that this matter be called to the attention of the House, as the gentleman from Illinois is doing.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MEEKER. Is this bureau created by legislation or under an order by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BRITTEN. By legislative action.

Mr. MEEKER. Could it be turned over without the consent of Congress?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; in the same way that the War Department has turned over its purchasing bureau because it could not possibly take care of the business. It now acts purely as a rubber stamp. The increase in the work has been so tremendous that it could not do it. But Admiral McGowan, with his excellent corps of 33 to start with, has been able to keep up with the Navy's demands. That corps is now enlarged to 121, and I was about to say these gentlemen come from all parts of the country, where they may have been getting salaries from $10,000 to $20,000 a year. They are not men of the draft age, between 21 and 31, avoiding the trenches, but they may be between 40 and 50 and 60. They are down there doing their bit, and doing it well, and no one can point a finger at any contract that has been let—no one on the floor of the House has ever stood here and talked against the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts or the Bureau of Yards and Docks, each of which have been spending millions of dollars, as has been done in regard to the Council of National Defense.

Now, I know nothing about the charges against the Council of National Defense, and I am not criticizing it, but I do not want to see this change made.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. Does the gentleman think that the duties of the Bureau of Supplies could be taken over by this body and performed successfully?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not successfully.

Mr. TALBOTT. Does the gentleman think it could be taken over without the consent of Congress?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; in the same way that the Quartermaster's Bureau in the War Department was taken over without the consent of Congress. The War Department really signs the contract as prepared by the war industries committee. A wooden man with a stamp is all that is necessary.

Mr. TALBOTT. The Committee on Naval Affairs reports a bill making the appropriations for the Bureau of Supplies. That is where the money comes from—where the appropriation comes from—and it could not be done without that appropriation.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Committee on Military Affairs in the same way makes appropriations for the Quartermaster Corps, whose duties in this direction have been practically absorbed without the consent of Congress. I will show the gentleman how reasonably they propose to bring these two boards together. They say here we are establishing a price for steel of $64 a ton, a price of so much a yard for this, so much a foot for that, so much a pound for various things. Well, now, do gentlemen think that Admiral McGowan's efficient corps is not cognizant of these prices which are being established from time to time? They will take advantage of all of those, and what is more, they are calling for bids every day all over the United States. Business is not being done on a 10 per cent basis. Admiral McGowan takes bids on everything; the bids are opened in public at a certain day and a certain hour, and everybody who cares to may be present to see the proceeding and get a fair chance at the millions now being spent. That is the way the bureau is doing its business. But they say, "We are establishing prices for many commodities and we ought to have the supply and accounts of the Navy, because we are establishing these prices for the Army and for other governmental bureaus, and therefore the Navy should come in." But, my dear gentlemen, the Navy can take advantage of these prices with its present organization.

Admiral Sims is cabling over here every day for something of an important character for use of the destroyer fleet in British waters, and within 24 hours Admiral McGowan has the stuff loaded on some steamer pulling to the other side. He is not handicapped by red tape, but these gentlemen will handicap him because they have no legal status. They can say to him, "You had better buy such and such stuff," and that they have arranged to take bids, and Admiral McGowan will say, "Well, I had better look into it," and of course that will make continued delay.

Now, to summarize my remarks briefly:

At the outbreak of the war the purchase division consisted of a personnel of about 33 officers and civil employees, which organization was a nucleus about which an orderly expansion was made for the purpose of meeting the greatly increased demands made upon it in effecting Navy purchases.

Mr. Hancock was the officer in charge, and was assisted by Mr. Hilton in connection with fuel and transportation, Mr. Cobey in connection with purchases, and Mr. Parsons in connection with logistics—that is, the plans incident to preparation for war.

In order to meet the requirements for additional clerical assistance, about 75 naval reservists were enrolled, among whom were experienced bookkeepers, stenographers, typewriters, and clerks. There was also added to the personnel of the division a number of business men, who had volunteered their services and who have had previous wide experience in connection with certain lines of production. The idea in obtaining the services of these gentlemen was to have the benefit of their advice in connection with purchases along those lines with which they are particularly familiar. Among these specialists are Mr. McIntosh in connection with foodstuffs; Mr. Fuller, iron and steel production; Mr. Hooper, textiles; Mr. Riley, chemicals; and Mr. Morford, lumber. The expert advice of these gentlemen has been of incalculable value in connection with purchases since for most of these items the supply has been very much less than the demand, and there is, therefore, involved a thorough knowledge of the market conditions in order to obtain the most advantageous prices and deliveries.

The work in general has followed the same lines and procedure as existed prior to the outbreak of war, and the methods used in making Navy purchases, which were the result of experience gained through many years of progressive development, have fully and adequately met the situation during the progress of hostilities, and this in accordance with the Revised Statutes of the United States, 3709 to 3746, inclusive, which set forth in detail the procedure to be followed in making purchases for the Navy, after strict adherence to the principles of public competition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the subject upon which the gentleman from Illinois has just been speaking.

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. SISSON. I do not want to take up the time unnecessarily, but I would like to have five minutes about this particular matter.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The bill under consideration is of so important a character—

Mr. SISSON. Nothing can be much more important than to keep within the Navy this magnificent organization which they have there and about which there has been absolutely no criticism. I want to call the attention of the House to a few facts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the same subject as referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to couple with that a request that I may have unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I object to both requests.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if it was not the understanding that I should have 10 minutes?

Mr. ALEXANDER. After we finish this bill, I have no objection. I understand the gentleman has a matter of personal privilege, and he can claim it at any time.

Mr. NORTON. It is not a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The agreement under which this bill is being considered was that debate should be confined to the subject matter of the bill. Consent was granted with that understanding, and I must object.

Mr. NORTON. I will say that under the statement made to me by the gentleman from New York I was given to understand that I would have 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter the United States Shipping Board may, if in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry, and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States: Provided, That no such vessel shall engage in the coastwise trade except upon a permit issued by the United States Shipping Board, which permit shall limit or define the scope of the trade and the time of such employment: Provided further, That in issuing permits the board shall give preference to vessels of foreign registry owned, leased, or chartered by citizens of the United States or corporations thereof: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be notified at the end of 20 minutes, although I hope I shall not occupy that much time.

On July 31 last I introduced House bill 5609, giving the President power to permit vessels of foreign registry to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States during the present war or emergency. Hearings were held upon that bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question before leaving for a conference?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill which the gentleman brings in proposes to introduce into the coastwise trade of the United States vessels of foreign registry, which is a reversal of conditions existent in the United States for more than a hundred years. I assume the gentleman will explain that, but in view of the fact that this change is so radical I desire to ask the gentleman whether in the bill he has presented he will consent to an amendment in the third line, where it is provided that during "the present war and for a period of 120 days" the act shall be effective, so that the language used in the report may be substituted. The report refers to "the present war with Germany." If that language is not included, it might be inferred that the act was intended to be effective longer than the war with Germany.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; that is satisfactory.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not understand the bill intends to suspend the coastwise laws permanently.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman holds that this law is only temporary, due to our war necessities?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman consent to the amendment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to that, and I will ask the gentleman to call it to the attention of his colleague, Mr. EDMONDS. As I was about to say, hearings were held on House bill 5609 on September 6, 11, 13, 18, and 19, and every phase of this question was thoroughly considered. It is essentially emergency legislation to meet conditions growing out of the present war. On the 9th of August I received a letter from the President of the United States urging legislation not along any particular lines but adequate to meet the existing conditions in a rational way. The text of that letter is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 9, 1917.

MY DEAR JUDGE: May I take the liberty of asking what fortunes H. R. 5609 is meeting with? I think, as I believe you do, that the matter of permitting vessels of foreign registry to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States is an urgent one, and I hope that there are prospects that the resolution may pass.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

HON. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, after considering the original bill and with the purpose of limiting the provisions of the law to meet the existing emergency and not to overturn a policy of the Government, followed from its foundation, which is opposed to the admission of ships under foreign registry to the coastwise trade, framed a substitute for the original bill. That substitute is House bill 6175, now under consideration.

Mr. DOWELL rose.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire first to have an opportunity to make my statement and then I shall be glad to answer any questions that may be asked.

After the committee had agreed on the substitute, it submitted it to the Shipping Board to know if in its present shape it would meet the present emergency, and, in answer to my inquiry, Mr. Edward N. Hurley, the chairman, wrote me a letter as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, September 19, 1917.

HON. J. W. ALEXANDER,
Chairman Committee on the Merchant Marine,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: I am sending you a copy of a substitute measure, which, Mr. Huger informs me, has been submitted for your committee's consideration, respecting the admission of foreign-built vessels under American registry and vessels under foreign registry to engage, under certain restrictions, in the coastwise trade during the present war or emergency.

We feel that in principle the powers conferred under this substitute will enable us to secure the desired result looking to the conservation of tonnage and relieving rail congestion.

I am, with kind regards,
Yours, very truly,

EDWARD N. HURLEY,
Chairman.

As showing the attitude of those directly interested in the coastwise shipping industry, I desire to read a letter dated September 25, addressed to me by Mr. H. H. Raymond, president of the American Steamship Association. This association represents all of the shipping engaged in the coastwise trade, as I understand it. The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP ASSOCIATION,
New York, September 25, 1917.

HON. JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER,
Chairman Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Reports reach us through the public press that the bill recently introduced into Congress which proposed to admit, without limit or restriction, for the duration of the war, foreign vessels to operate in the coastwise trades of the United States, and which was referred to your committee, has been reported back to Congress amended as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, or emergency, the United States Shipping Board may, if in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of the law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States: Provided, That no such vessel shall engage in the coastwise trade except upon a permit issued by the United States Shipping Board, which permit shall limit or define the scope of the trade and the time of such employment: And provided further, That in issuing permits the board shall give preference to vessels of foreign registry owned, leased, or chartered by citizens of the United States or corporations thereof: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports."

We desire to express through you to your committee our appreciation of the wisdom displayed in formulating this legislation. We realize that, owing to the large number of vessels to be withdrawn from the coastwise trades to meet the requirements of the Government in its over-seas naval and military operations, the consequent reduction of shipping on these routes may be reflected in congestion of freight where other craft can not be procured or the railroads are not in a position to furnish substitute transportation facilities therefor. For this reason we recognize the necessity for emergency legislation which would avoid such complications. At the same time we feel that your committee have had in mind that but for the wise policy of enlightened self-interest pursued by this country in conserving its coastwise shipping to American vessels this large volume of tonnage would not have been ready at hand available for immediate governmental service, and, appreciating this, have admirably met a unique situation by recommending that Congress shall so legislate that there shall be no opportunity to menace the preservation and development of this important means of our national defense.

Very truly, yours,

H. H. RAYMOND, President.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The chief doubt or question that arises in my mind, or the mind of anyone about this bill is this: How will it affect our coastwise traffic after the war is over? Will it prevent the getting back of our own vessels?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Absolutely not. If by the development of our shipbuilding industry we increase our tonnage in the present emergency beyond the demands of our foreign trade—that is, seagoing tonnage—and the ships come back into the coastwise trade, there will be no occasion to further exercise any of the powers conferred on the Shipping Board under this bill. It is only to meet the emergency, and when we have not sufficient vessels of American registry in the coastwise trade to render the service, that there will be any occasion for the Shipping Board to exercise the powers conferred upon them under this bill; and its operation is limited in any event to the present war with Germany and to 120 days after the end of the war.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It has been the policy, I think, of the great nations of the world, generally speaking, to limit the coastwise traffic to their own ships. I suppose the idea back of that is this, that if our coastwise traffic is done by vessels of foreign countries, if we should get into a war with those nations whose ships do that business, they would withdraw those ships and we would have no ships for the coastwise traffic. It happens in this instance, however, that we are at war upon the side of the great maritime nations which can supply all of the ships that we need. But that, I understand, is the principle which has led to the restriction of coastwise traffic to the vessels of the nation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; generally speaking.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. I want to ask the gentleman something about this language, commencing at line 4, "that the United States Shipping Board may, if in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of law." Does not that delegate the power to the Shipping Board to make law and to say what is law and what is not law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I think not; the act of August 18, 1914, admitting foreign-built ships to American registry uses that language.

Mr. DILLON. Yes; but you say to this board that you may say that that shall not be law or that that may be law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The law is not repealed, but it is suspended during the emergency. The board is given the power to determine if the emergency exists.

Mr. DILLON. I have no doubt—

Mr. ALEXANDER. I hope the gentleman will not detain me longer on that question.

Mr. DILLON. Just a moment. I have no doubt that Congress may make rules and regulations for boards, but absolutely to delegate the power to a board to say what is law and what is not law I have some doubt about.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Congress says that the law may be suspended when the board finds that the emergency exists, and then, when the emergency is found to exist, the board shall have power and may exercise the powers vested in them by this bill. We do not give them any power, except if an emergency exists to suspend our present coastwise laws, and the bill expressly provides that in that event only the provisions of this bill shall go into effect. Now as to the conditions in our coastwise-trade traffic. The statement of Hon. E. T. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation, before the committee disclosed that at the end of the fiscal year 1914, and just before the war broke out, we had registered under the American flag and engaged in the foreign trade 1,076,000 gross tons. We had on the Great Lakes

2,882,000 gross tons; and on the high seas and rivers we had 3,969,000 gross tons; in all 7,928,000 gross tons.

At the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, our shipping registered for the foreign trade has increased from 1,076,000 gross tons on June 30, 1914, to 2,422,000 gross tons, or nearly two and one-half times.

Our shipping on the Great Lakes has dropped from 2,882,000 gross tons to 2,771,000 gross tons; that is a little over 100,000 gross tons. But it is fair to assume that more than 100,000 gross tons of shipping has been withdrawn from the Great Lakes, because we know that there has been considerable tonnage built on the Great Lakes during that period.

On the seaboard in the coastwise trade our tonnage has fallen from 3,969,000 gross tons to 3,607,000 gross tons, a decline of about 362,000 gross tons, or 10 per cent.

These are the figures covering the period up to the 30th of June of this year.

Prior to that time practically no ships had been taken out of the coastwise trade for military purposes. Since then the withdrawal of shipping from the coastwise trade to carry troops and munitions and supplies of every kind to meet the requirements of our Army and Navy has been very rapid, and it is probable that in a relatively short time 1,000,000 or more tons of shipping must be withdrawn from the coastwise trade to meet the requirements of the military operations of the United States.

Mr. Stevens, the vice chairman of the Shipping Board, appeared before our committee along with other witnesses and made this statement, which is found on page 39 of part 1 of the hearings:

Commissioner STEVENS. It is perfectly apparent to all of us who have studied the shipping situation that every ship of suitable size and strength may have to be diverted from our coastwise trade to war needs. Now, that will leave a very serious deficit in the transportation facilities for our important coastwise commerce, and there is already a shortage. There is not a day in which the Shipping Board does not receive requests not only from the shipping companies but from merchants and manufacturers, either asking us to procure some additional tonnage for them to take the place of ships that have been taken out of the coastwise trade or begging us not to take any ships out of the particular service that affects them.

There is to-day a shortage of the necessary tonnage to take coal to New England by water, and all of the great industries of New England are dependent upon water transportation for coal. But there are a good many boats engaged in that trade which are of a size and strength which makes them suitable for the over-seas trade. The Navy has already taken out quite a good many of the seagoing tugs which tow the barges, and we undoubtedly will have to take more for the direct war needs of the Army. And nearly every day I get letters from people in New England, interested in the textile industry, saying, "Whatever you do, don't take off any of the boats running from Gulf and south Atlantic ports to New England, because we are dependent upon them for our supply of cotton to keep our great textile mills going." And yet it is very apparent that some of the boats in that trade will, in the very near future, if not immediately, have to be diverted to war needs.

Now, if this bill were passed, it is not intended or expected that the President, acting under it, would simply throw down the bars at once and say that all ships of foreign registry may engage in any American coastwise trade. But we want the bill broad enough so that the President can meet any emergency as it arises. I want to point out what could be done. There are probably between four and five hundred thousand tons of neutral shipping under charter to American interests for the American trade. Neutral shipping, naturally, desires as much as possible to keep out of the war zone on account of the great danger, and we undoubtedly could secure more neutral tonnage if it could be promised safe trades. There are a good many hundred thousands tons of neutral shipping that is tied up and not in use and that has not been in use for a considerable length of time. Now, if an American merchant or American ship company could use these chartered neutral boats, not only for trade to Cuba and the West Indies and South America, but in the trade from Porto Rico and in the trade from coast to coast in this important movement of commodities like cotton and coal, it will enable us to fill the vacancy, caused by taking our own ships and putting them in the war zone, with neutral ships which otherwise, perhaps, would not be available for any service.

I would like to say, also, something about the situation on the Great Lakes. A great many boats have been withdrawn from the Great Lakes by both Canadian and American interests for the coastwise service and also for the trans-Atlantic service. At the present time the Shipping Board has started a scheme to take out of the Lakes this fall, between now and the time of the closing of navigation, all the boats which can possibly come through the Welland Canal, either whole or cut in two. The amount of that tonnage there, which possibly can be moved in that way and made suitable for the coastwise service, is over 300,000 tons. Now, we may not be able to take all that tonnage out, because we have not facilities enough for making the necessary changes and repairs in the ships that have to be made; but we will take out all we can. In the meantime that will deplete the tonnage on the Great Lakes. And, as you gentlemen are all aware, the Canadian Government, by an order in council, is now permitting American registered boats to engage in trade between port and port on the Great Lakes. If we draw out this tonnage, and there should be next season a serious shortage of tonnage on the Great Lakes, it will be possible, under this bill, for the President by Executive order, only during the emergency, to allow Canadian boats to trade from port to port in the United States.

It is not the purpose, as far as I am aware, and there is no desire on the part of the Shipping Board, to change the long-established policy of the Government about the coastwise trade. But we do know, from an intimate study of the war needs for tonnage, that there not only exists to-day a serious shortage but that between now and the time when our great building program will begin to turn out the ships, in the next six or eight months, the emergency in the shortage of tonnage will be very much greater. And I think everybody will be glad to have a bill like this passed, so that the President might, by Executive order, meet the situation. He might issue an order just for the Great Lakes; he might issue an order just for chartered boats. Under this bill he might do even what has been suggested by one gentleman—permit the Shipping Board to allow boats to trade for special voyages. But I want to say about that suggestion that it would cause delay and much administrative detail.

Another instance, we have received many very urgent requests from the Government of Porto Rico and the Chamber of Commerce of Porto Rico for more service, and they urgently requested that legislation of this kind be enacted, because Porto Rico is short of tonnage to-day. Several of the boats in that service have been taken out and put in the service of the Army.

We feel certain that no public interest is going to suffer from this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice the report of the committee says it is proposed to take off the Great Lakes about 300,000 gross tons of shipping. What is going to be substituted in place of those boats on the Great Lakes now to accommodate the shipping needs of the Great Lakes?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, the purpose, I understand, is this: To utilize the smaller boats not suitable for the over-seas trade, as far as they may be suitable, in the coastwise trade and in the trade on the Great Lakes, and in addition to that, of course, the purpose is to let the Canadian vessels and our vessels on the Great Lakes cooperate to meet the demand for transportation facilities on the Great Lakes, because it is urgent.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the committee any information as to what tonnage is being constructed for traffic on the Great Lakes to supply the needs of the ships that will be taken off?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; we have no accurate information. We know that tonnage is being built, but I am unable to state offhand how much. The gentleman knows that navigation on the Great Lakes will close shortly, and water transportation will be at an end until next spring.

Mr. MADDEN. I know that is true, but does the committee think it is wise to rob the Great Lakes of its tonnage in order that that tonnage may be utilized in other places? Will there be a sufficient advantage to the country at large by taking the facilities away from the Great Lakes and adding those facilities to other sections of the Nation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it would be very poor policy to do that.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what is proposed to be done in this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman is mistaken. It is not proposed to do that. It is assumed the Shipping Board in the exercise of a sound discretion will so administer the law as to meet the needs of our traffic not only in the coastwise trade but on the Great Lakes as well.

Mr. MADDEN. The committee, I notice, in its report says the Shipping Board is trying between now and the close of navigation to withdraw from the Great Lakes all the tonnage that can possibly come through the Welland Canal that can be serviceable in the coastwise trade, estimated at over 300,000 gross tons. Now, that tonnage may be able to operate in the coastwise trade in the winter season, but is it proposed to have the tonnage come back to the Lakes at the opening of next spring's navigation? That is the question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, that would be the wise thing to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it wise, in view of the great needs of shipping on the Great Lakes, to authorize the Shipping Board to take the facilities away from the Great Lakes without some understanding that that shipping is going to be returned to the Great Lakes when navigation opens next spring?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill does not give any such power. The bill rests power in the Shipping Board to admit vessels of foreign registry to the coastwise trade, if in its judgment the interests of the United States may be served by doing so.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does the committee state that? It is in its report.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not say that it is intended to confer on the board any such power under this bill. Mr. STEVENS—and I read his statement just now—

Mr. MADDEN. It is the report of the committee that I am reading from.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am talking about the bill. The bill gives no such power. The report refers to what the Shipping Board proposes to do whether this bill becomes a law or not. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri requested the Chair to advise him at the end of 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman one or two more questions.

The committee evidently has it in its mind that it is proposed to remove this shipping from the Great Lakes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The ocean-going tonnage. Mr. Edward N. Hurley is a Chicago man and the chairman of the Shipping Board, and should be informed about conditions on the Great Lakes, and the purpose is no doubt to leave on the Great Lakes all the tonnage that is necessary to provide for the movement of the traffic on the Lakes. It would certainly be folly to rob the Great Lakes of necessary water transportation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the committee think there is more tonnage on the Great Lakes now than is needed to perform the service there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, if the Canadian tonnage and our tonnage cooperate and engage interchangeably in the trade from port to port between Canadian and American ports it is the opinion of the Shipping Board that it will increase the facilities very largely and will greatly multiply the potentiality of the shipping on the Great Lakes. That is the purpose of suspending our coastwise laws on the Great Lakes.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the opinion of the committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is our opinion, too. It is just like conditions in the coastwise trade. We would not consent to foreign shipping coming into our coastwise trade unless we thought by cooperation we could relieve the congestion and very materially add to our transportation facilities by water.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I am in favor of relieving the congestion to the extent that it is possible to facilitate the shipping.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to say that this bill does not undertake to affect the question of how much of our shipping may be withdrawn from the Lakes.

Mr. MADDEN. But it does not prohibit it.

Mr. HARDY. It simply leaves the law as it is in regard to that.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the purpose of this paragraph in the report of the committee?

Mr. HARDY. I suppose that in drawing that report it was thought the general administration would use our ships where they were most urgently needed, and that some of the ships might be taken as a question of discretion. It is not affected by this bill at all. In that event the exchange of transportation facilities between American and Canadian ships would help supply any deficiency.

Mr. MADDEN. It is the opinion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that there would be no disadvantage to the shipping on the Great Lakes by the authority which is granted in this law?

Mr. HARDY. On the contrary, it would mean an increase of their shipping.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I should certainly protest against any such thing as that, because that would defeat the very purpose of the law itself.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, we do give unbridled authority in the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We give discretion to the board, but it is to meet emergencies as they exist now and as they may arise from time to time, and if the withdrawal of tonnage from the Great Lakes would leave a greater emergency there unprovided for, it seems to me it would be a very unsound exercise of discretion.

Mr. MADDEN. I think so, too, and I thought it might be wise to have the RECORD show that it is not the purpose of this bill to grant authority to the Shipping Board to denude the Great Lakes of the facilities which they now enjoy for the transportation of the commodities of the people between the ports on the Great Lakes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Absolutely not. The purpose of this bill is to add to our shipping facilities by admitting ships under foreign registry to our coastwise trade.

Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I shall incorporate in the RECORD my report on this bill. The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 162, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.]

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report:

The committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6175) giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry, and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska, having considered the same, report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The full text of the bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter the United States Shipping Board may, in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry, and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States: Provided, That no such vessel shall engage in the coastwise trade except upon a permit issued by the United States Shipping Board, which permit shall limit or define the scope of the trade and the time of such employment: Provided further, That in issuing permits the board shall give preference to vessels of foreign registry owned, leased, or chartered by citizens of the United States or corporations thereof: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports."

It will be noted that the bill gives the United States Shipping Board power to suspend our navigation laws relating to the coastwise trade during the present war with Germany and for a period of 120 days thereafter, and permit—

1. Vessels of foreign registry to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

2. Foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

3. That no such vessels shall engage in our coastwise trade except upon the following limitations and conditions:

(a) Upon permits issued by the United States Shipping Board limiting and defining the scope of the trade and the time of such employment.

(b) In issuing permits the Shipping Board shall give preference to vessels of foreign registry owned, leased, or chartered by citizens of the United States or corporations thereof.

(c) The coastwise trade with Alaska and between Alaskan ports is excepted from the provisions of the act.

This is one of the many measures framed to meet the emergencies created by the war with Germany and our participation in that war. Its enactment at an early date is absolutely necessary to supply the needs of our domestic commerce growing out of the diversion of a large part of our coastwise tonnage to the over-seas trade.

The demands of our Army and Navy for transports, colliers, supply and munition ships to meet present and future requirements are so imperative that it is and will continue to be necessary to utilize all of our available ocean tonnage suitable for that purpose, with the result that our coastwise trade will suffer great inconvenience and loss unless we utilize all of the available tonnage, whether domestic or foreign, to meet our requirements.

There is no purpose in the proposed legislation to break down our coastwise laws or depart from a policy that has been consistently followed from the foundation of the Government, and all fears expressed to that effect are without foundation.

This legislation is proposed without reference to the soundness or unsoundness of the policy heretofore followed of reserving our coastwise trade for American-built vessels, or whether or not the extension of our coastwise laws to Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands is wise or unwise.

This is a war measure and is limited to the period of the war and a reasonable time thereafter, and the powers vested in the Shipping Board are so hedged about and limited that there need be no occasion for fear on the part of the interests that have enjoyed the monopoly of our coastwise trade in the past that they will suffer. They, in common with all other patriotic American citizens, must view the problem from the standpoint of public interest and not from the standpoint of private gain.

There can be no ground for fear from the standpoint of our shipbuilding industry. Never in the history of the world has any nation embarked on such a gigantic shipbuilding program. Not only are our existing shipyards crowded to capacity with new work but large sums are being expended both by the Government and private interests in providing new plants for the construction of merchant vessels to replace the losses occasioned by the German submarines, and with the definite purpose of making that method of warfare hopeless as a means of Germany winning the war.

The Shipping Board laid before the committee a complete report of the tonnage under the American flag now engaged in the foreign trade and the tonnage withdrawn from the coastwise trade on the Great Lakes and on our seaboards to meet the requirements mentioned above.

Some of the information submitted, and particularly that regarding the German ships seized by the Government, and how and to what extent utilized at this time, is of a confidential nature, and for manifest reasons should not be made a part of this report.

The necessity for this legislation is twofold; first, to make good the considerable shrinkage in our coastwise tonnage; and, second, and of greater importance in the present emergency, to make sure that all the shipping owned or controlled by ourselves and our allies shall be made available to meet every need of our ocean-borne commerce, and of our Army and Navy during the period of the war.

It is of the utmost importance to provide, as far as possible, that our ships shall carry cargo on every mile and on every leg of their voyage. Ships should not go in ballast from port to port wherever it is possible to carry cargo.

At the end of the fiscal year 1914, and just before the war broke out, we had registered under the American flag and engaged in the foreign trade 1,076,000 gross tons. We had on the Great Lakes 2,882,000 gross tons; and on the high seas and rivers we had 3,969,000 gross tons; in all, 7,928,000 gross tons.

At the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, our shipping registered for the foreign trade has increased from 1,076,000 gross tons on June 30, 1914, to 2,422,000 gross tons, or nearly two and one-half times.

Our shipping on the Great Lakes has dropped from 2,882,000 gross tons to 2,771,000 gross tons; that is a little over 100,000 gross tons. But it is fair to assume that more than 100,000 gross tons of shipping has been withdrawn from the Great Lakes, because we know that there has been considerable tonnage built on the Great Lakes during that period.

On the seaboards in the coastwise trade our tonnage has fallen from 3,969,000 gross tons to 3,607,000 gross tons; a decline of about 362,000 gross tons, or 10 per cent.

These are the figures covering the period up to the 30th of June of this year.

Prior to that time practically no ships had been taken out of the coastwise trade for military purposes. Since then the withdrawal of shipping from the coastwise trade to carry troops and munitions and supplies of every kind to meet the requirements of our Army and Navy has been very rapid, and it is probable that in a relatively short time 1,000,000 or more tons of shipping must be withdrawn from the coastwise trade to meet the requirements of the military operations of the United States.

Under our navigation laws a foreign ship may enter a port in Maine, for example, and proceed all the way down the coast until she reaches Galveston or continue her voyage on through the Panama Canal and on up the Pacific coast to Seattle and discharge foreign cargo at each port, and so on her return voyage she may take on cargo for a foreign port or ports, but one thing she may not do—that is, take on cargo at American ports to be discharged at other American ports.

This style of voyage is of frequent if not daily occurrence, and should not be permitted to continue under existing circumstances. It involves tremendous waste in the matter of transportation facilities by water.

It would seem highly desirable that vessels, whether domestic or foreign, proceeding from port to port receiving and discharging cargo for foreign account, should utilize available cargo space to meet the pressing demands of our commerce coastwise.

Hence there is no reason why a foreign vessel coming into a port on the Atlantic seaboard and discharging her cargo there should go empty to a Gulf port to load with cotton or lumber or other commodity for export and should not carry cargo from the Atlantic to the Gulf port.

Then, too, there is no reason why a vessel coming into a Gulf or Pacific port from a Central or South American port should go empty from the Gulf port to a port or ports on the Atlantic seaboard to load with cargo for some foreign port instead of carrying cargo of sugar, lumber, grain, or cotton from a Gulf port or Pacific port to Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or Boston.

There is a shortage of the necessary tonnage to take coal to New England by water.

The Navy has already taken out quite a good many of the seagoing tugs which tow the barges, and more will undoubtedly be taken for the direct war needs of the Army.

The textile industry of New England is much concerned about the withdrawal of vessels running from Gulf and South Atlantic ports to New England, because they are dependent upon them for the supply of cotton to keep their textile mills going, and yet it will be necessary to withdraw a large part of that tonnage for Army and Navy purposes.

There are several hundred thousand tons of neutral shipping under charter to American interests for the American trade. Neutral shipping naturally desires as much as possible to keep out of the war zone on account of the great danger, and we could undoubtedly secure more neutral tonnage if it could be promised safe trade.

There are several hundred thousand tons of neutral shipping tied up and not in use, and that has not been in use for a considerable time.

Now, if an American merchant or an American stock company could use these chartered neutral boats not only for trade to Cuba and the West Indies and South America but in the trade to and from Porto Rico and in the trade from coast to coast in this important movement of commodities like cotton and coal, it will fill with neutral ships the vacancy caused by taking our own ships and putting them in the war zone, which otherwise, perhaps, would not be available for any service.

A great many boats have been withdrawn from the Great Lakes by both Canadian and American interests for the coastwise service and also for the trans-Atlantic service.

The Shipping Board is planning between now and the close of navigation to withdraw from the Great Lakes all the tonnage that can possibly come through the Welland Canal that may be serviceable in the coastwise trade, estimated at over 300,000 gross tons.

The Canadian Government by order in council is now permitting American registered boats to engage in the trade between port and port on the Great Lakes, and this arrangement should be reciprocal in the present emergency in the interest of the trade of both countries.

The new tonnage now building by the Emergency Fleet Corporation will not be available for many months to come.

Many urgent requests have been received by the Shipping Board from the Government of Porto Rico and the Chamber of Commerce of Porto Rico for more ships in that service, etc.

Alaska is excluded from the provisions of the bill for the reason that there seems to be no shortage in tonnage in that trade at this time.

In view of the existing emergency, which will increase in gravity with the progress of the war, the President and the Secretary of Commerce and the Shipping Board approve and urge the passage of this bill before Congress adjourns.

This is a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. Speaker, it will no doubt be of interest to the Congress and to the country to know that on the 1st of next November there will be available a total of 593 ships, with an aggregate dead-weight capacity of 3,730,844 tons, suitable for the trans-Atlantic service. This means that our shipping under the American flag registered for the foreign trade will have increased from 2,424,000 tons—that being the amount of our shipping registered for the foreign trade June 30, 1917—to 3,730,844 tons.

At this rate of increase there is little encouragement for the Kaiser's claim that he will win by continuing his ruthless submarine warfare.

The following statement, given to the press on September 26, 1917, with the approval of the United States Shipping Board, is also of profound significance as evidence of the activity of the board in meeting the emergencies created by the war with Germany:

[From the Committee on Public Information.]

SEPTEMBER 26, 1917.

NOTE.—This statement was prepared with the assistance of the experts of the United States Shipping Board and approved by the full board. The figures may be regarded as definitely accurate.

The United States has to-day 458 ships of over 1,500 dead-weight tons, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,871,359, either engaged in or capable of participating in foreign trade. There are also 117 ships of a tonnage of 700,285 of German and Austrian origin. The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation has commandeered nearly 400 steel ships, of more than 2,500,000 tons, which are being completed or under contract for construction in American yards. The board's fleet corporation has also contracted for 636 ships, with a tonnage of 3,124,700. Totaled, these figures show that the United States will have near the end of 1918 a merchant fleet of more than 1,600 ships, aggregating 9,200,000 tons, to carry its foreign commerce, as compared with an over-seas marine of 1,614,222 tons on June 30, 1914, scarcely a month before the European war began.

The tonnage referred to is exclusive of that engaged on inland waters, unsuitable coastwise ships, and small craft operating along the coast and in bays and harbors, and does not, of course, include the prospective additional program of the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The fleet in prospect is already becoming a reality. Several of the commandeered ships are already taking cargo; others will leave the ways in increasing numbers with each succeeding month. The ships for which the Shipping Board has contracted are under construction and the first launching is expected within 60 to 90 days.

Of even greater interest to the Congress and the country should be the statement of the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation of its activities during the past two months and its vast shipbuilding program, now well under way.

STATEMENT.

During the past two months the Emergency Fleet Corporation has awarded contracts for 118 wooden vessels of 3,500 tons dead-weight capacity each to 27 different shipyards.

There has previously been awarded contracts for 235 wooden vessels of similar type to the above and for 58 vessels of composite construction, thereby making a total award to date of 411 wooden and composite vessels of an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 1,460,900.

During the past two months the designs for machinery have been completed for the manufacture of engines, boilers, and other articles of equipment for these vessels, for which the facilities available of machine shops and boiler works throughout the country have been availed of. Specifications have been prepared and negotiations outlined and initiated for the assembly and installation of machinery in wooden vessels, the most of which have been or are being constructed as "hulls only." Great difficulty has been experienced on the Atlantic coast in obtaining suitable lumber for these ships, and it is anticipated that there will be greater delay in their completion than was expected when this movement was begun, notwithstanding every possible effort on the part of the corporation and its contractors.

Since August 1 there have been awarded contracts for 155 steel cargo vessels of 1,076,800 tons dead-weight tonnage distributed among 6 shipyards. The most important of these contracts are for vessels of the so-called fabricated type, and special shipyards are being prepared for them.

Contracts for the boilers and machinery and steel construction of these vessels have already been placed, and the contractors are actively at work in the preparation of the sites for the assembling of these ships. The best efforts of the Emergency Fleet Corporation are devoted to expediting these great shipbuilding projects.

Previous to August 1 seventy steel cargo vessels of 587,000 tons total dead-weight capacity had been contracted for. These vessels were distributed among 10 shipyards. Therefore, at the present time the total number of steel vessels under construction for the United States is 225, with a total aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 1,663,800.

REQUISITIONED VESSELS.

By proclamation of August 3, 1917, the Fleet Corporation, under authority delegated by the President under the provisions of the Emergency act approved June 15, 1917, requisitioned all vessels under construction in the shipyards of the United States of 2,500 tons dead-weight capacity and above. By this act the United States acquired a total number of 403 vessels determined by the progress reports obtained from the various shipyards to be actually under construction; in many cases where keels had not actually been laid, engines, boilers, equipment, and materials, all of which were also requisitioned, are in various stages of progress; and in comparatively few cases contracts existing for vessels not actually begun which may or may not be proceeded with as the merits of each case, compared with what is desirable construction, are considered.

The total dead-weight tonnage under construction thus acquired and on which orders have been issued to proceed with the maximum expedition exceeds 2,000,000 tons dead-weight.

SUMMARY.

There are now under construction for the Emergency Fleet Corporation:

Vessels under construction:		Total dead-weight tonnage.
Wood	353	1,253,000
Composite	58	207,000
Steel	235	1,663,800
Requisitioned	400	2,800,000
Total	1,036	5,923,800

In addition to the above, Congress in a pending bill is authorizing the construction of additional vessels whose total dead-weight capacity will be nearly 5,000,000 tons. Plans for the major portion of these additional vessels are now in course of preparation and many of them will be of special types adapted to particular necessities of war, and while substantially cargo carriers will have much greater speed than the cargo vessels now under construction.

The corporation has ascertained from the builders of requisitioned vessels their demands for structural steel, machinery, and various items of equipment, and is endeavoring to regulate the supply of these items to provide for the individual needs of the shipbuilders in accordance with their program of capacity, so far as the country's resources are available. And it is apparent that with the similar needs of the naval service and the War Department, with which the Emergency Fleet Corporation is working in harmonious cooperation, every mechanical resource of the United States, with considerably increasing development, will be necessary for the realization of this program and what must follow in continuation of it.

INDUSTRIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

The Fleet Corporation has instituted an industrial service department which, by cooperation with the Department of Labor, is undertaking to assist shipbuilders and others in the employment of suitable labor and to indicate an extensive system of vocational training with the purpose of adapting allied trades and unskilled labor for service in shipyards, and through cooperation with the Young Men's Christian Association organization throughout the United States to give attention to the housing and personal affairs of the men recruited for shipbuilding work. The vast development of shipbuilding essential to this emergency necessitates an agency of this kind, because up to this time the thinning out of unskilled men in the older shipyards over a large territory is, in many instances, resulting in greatly decreased production. It has been estimated that 150,000 new men are necessary for full production.

With the passage of the pending bill the Congress will have authorized $1,984,000,000 for the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the actual appropriations made, including those in the pending bill, reach a total sum of $1,085,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to use two or three minutes of my own time. I do not think there is anything I can say to add to the able presentation of this bill by the chairman of the committee. Personally I am opposed to foreign ships going into our coastwise business, and could not have voted for the bill as originally introduced by the chairman. But as it was afterwards corrected and brought out in a new form by the committee, I can vote for it, because I believe the emergency exists to such an extent and will exist while this war is in progress, that it will be necessary to use from time to time these foreign ships to remove the congestion of freight in the ports, not only on the Great Lakes but along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. I am opposed generally to foreign ships going into our coastwise business, but I have no objection to this bill as it stands.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I understood—if I may be allowed—that the chairman of the committee agreed with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that he would be willing to have an amendment inserted in the bill—

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. I will offer that amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. All right.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, if no one else desires to be heard I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in favor of this bill. The only thing that I have to criticize in connection with it is the fact that it was not brought in here before. Either this House is a little inefficient or the administration is a little inefficient in not bringing war bills in here before this time.

In justification of these statements I want to call attention to the fact that on the breaking out of the Civil War President Lincoln called Congress together in extraordinary session on the 4th day of July, 1861. The session adjourned on the 6th day of August, 1861, 33 days after.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill ought to have been brought in before?

Mr. EMERSON. Bills relating to the war should have been brought in before. We had the advantage of the experience of other nations at war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did the gentleman give consideration to the labor conditions and what might result?

Mr. EMERSON. I am speaking generally of war measures that should have been brought in before.

Before any law is passed abridging the freedom of speech I desire to make a few observations. Before I do this I wish to call the attention of the Members that I have voted with the President upon every war measure that has been before this House. I ask, Is Congress inefficient, or is the administration inefficient? If Congress is to blame, certainly this branch of Congress is not in fault. We have passed each and every bill the President would have us pass speedily.

I believe a Republican administration is more efficient in carrying on wars than a Democratic administration and a Democratic Congress. [Applause.] Let me give you some proof. First, let us compare this first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress with the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, held after the South had seceded.

In the first place, Mr. Wilson has had Congress and the country with him from the beginning of this war, while Lincoln had 11 of his States out of the Union and a strong feeling in the North against the war. President Wilson got an espionage bill; Lincoln could not. President Wilson got a conscription bill through Congress; Lincoln had to take one without teeth.

The extra session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, as I said before, convened on the 4th day of July, 1861, and was in session until August 6, 1861, just 33 days, counting Sundays, and they passed more important legislation than this Congress has passed in six months. Our session has been six times as long as theirs. [Applause.] And we had the experience of other nations to guide us in what legislation we should pass, and the Civil War Congress did not.

Here is what the Thirty-seventh Congress did in 30 days:

Passed 47 important war measures, besides numerous other resolutions and bills.

Act to remit duty on arms.

Act to pay militia called into the service.

Act to further provide for collections of duties.

Act to provide assistant paymaster of Navy.

Act to authorize national loan.

Act to make additional appropriations for Army.

Act to alter and regulate Navy ration.

Act to authorize employment of volunteers.

Act for sundry civil expenses.

Act relating to forwarding soldiers' mail.

Act to provide for temporary increase of Navy.

Act to refund duties on arms to States.

Act to authorize additional enlistments in the Navy.

Act making further appropriations for Navy.

Act to investigate compensation of officers.

Act to authorize construction of ships.

Act making appropriations for fortifications.

Act relative to punishing certain crimes against United States.

Act to promote efficiency of engineers.

Act to authorize increase of Engineer Corps.

Act to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes.

Act relative to appeals to Supreme Court.

Act creating metropolitan police force for city of Baltimore.

Act to increase pay of privates.

Act requiring oath of allegiance from certain persons.

Act concerning Attorney General.

Act to provide for repairs of Long Bridge.

Act making appropriations for purchase of arms.

Act providing for commission to examine as to pay of officers.

Act to increase Medical Corps.

Act providing for collections of duties on imports.

Act to define and punish conspiracy.

Act to reimburse volunteers.

Act to increase Consular Service.

Act to authorize President to select superintendents of navy yards.

Act to provide for armed ships.

Act to prohibit sales of liquor to soldiers in District of Columbia.

Act to provide for the purchase of ordnance.

Act relating to revenue cutters.

Act to provide for better organization of militia.

Act to increase revenue.

Just think, we have been here six months and have not passed a revenue bill yet.

Act to authorize national loan.

Act to increase present Military Establishment.

Act to protect commerce of the United States.

Act to reduce consular fees on vessels.

Act to improve organization of Marine Corps.

Act to indemnify States for expenses incurred in defense of United States.

Act, the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill.

Act to provide for suppression of rebellion against United States.

Act making appropriations for the transportation of arms.

This shows the efficiency of a Republican Congress as compared to the inefficiency of a Democratic administration and Congress.

Now, let us turn to the Spanish War, when McKinley was President. The Fifty-fifth Congress was then in regular session, war was declared April 13, 1898, and Congress did its regular business, passed all necessary war legislation, and adjourned July 8, 1898.

You can never lick the Kaiser going at this snail-like pace. Lincoln's extra session passed all needed legislation in one-sixth of the time we have been in session, and we are not through yet. Let us draw a lesson in efficiency from the great Lincoln.

Let us answer these questions: Is Congress to blame? Is the executive branch of the Government to blame? Is a Republican Congress more efficient than a Democratic Congress? Is the House to blame? Is the Senate to blame for this unpardonable delay?

The House, in my opinion, has done its part with dispatch. The people will find out.

On this question of efficiency I desire to call the attention of the House to the wrangle between the Navy League and Secretary Daniels.

I know nothing about the merits of any personal name-calling match they are indulging in, but such boyish proceedings should not be permitted when it interferes with comforts reaching the boys in the Navy.

Secretary Daniels issued this statement:

In view of the slanderous and false statement of the Navy League, reflecting upon the honesty of the naval administration and the integrity of the officers of the Navy, etc., the Navy Department has directed that no officer, agent, or representative of the Navy League will be admitted to any naval station, naval reservation, or ship of the Navy.

These American citizens are denied the rights of American citizens.

When I was a boy we had childish fights and talked just like the Secretary does.

The Secretary has just got mad and taken his Navy home with him, and will not play with the Navy League any more. So there. The Secretary of the Navy should rise above such personal matters in this great crisis and work for the good of the Navy.

If Members of the House and Senate got peeved every time some one called them names we would be in hot water all the time. I am going to insert as a part of my speech a letter from Charles William Burrows, one of the leading citizens of Cleveland, concerning this comforts situation in the Navy.

The most cowardly and unjust piece of demagoguery is the practice adopted by some people by calling any man a "pro-German" who happens to disagree with them upon a matter of public policy. It is not only an evasion of the real issues, but a false and unfair attack upon people who are just as patriotic as the man who makes the accusation.

For instance, as soon as war was declared the administration asked for the passage of a drastic law for the control of the press. This was represented as a necessary war power and those who opposed it were hampering the prosecution of the war and helping the Kaiser. Fortunately, not even the Democratic press would stand for the bill, and it failed in its drastic form. We have had no press censorship and Germany has not secured any improper information whatever through the newspapers. The press has voluntarily refrained from printing anything that could be of use to the enemy—in some instances suppressing facts that would not have been helpful even if printed. [Applause.]

NATIONAL ONE CENT LETTER POSTAGE ASSOCIATION,
Cleveland, Ohio, September 24, 1917.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. EMERSON: I want to ask your help in connection with this Navy-comforts situation.

My daughter, Miss Burrows (Lorna), launched the destroyer Burrows, and due to this, when in Washington last winter, Mrs. Burrows and both daughters got interested in outfitting the men of our Navy with comfort sets of sweater, muffler, and wristlets through the Navy League, which knew what was needed and where it was wanted, as its managers were Annapolis graduates.

Beginning about May 1, the work progressed with much rapidity. Mrs. Newton D. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War, accepted the honorary chairmanship of the body and my younger daughter, Gladys E. Burrows, was made active chairman. At first there were half a dozen knitters; speedily there were 50, then 250, and finally 1,200 Cleveland women were knitting for the sailors through the Cleveland branch.

An outfit of sets was sent in May for the Burrows and reached the ship just before it sailed abroad, and were of great use, we learned later; and on July 26, 400 sets were sent on for the Vermont, which had been designated as one of the ships this branch was to outfit. Recently 400 more sets were sent for the Vermont; also 10 cases more of things for the Burrows, including a second outfit of comfort sets, an enormous case of heavy underwear, five cases of arctic overshoes, and a number of other needed items.

The shipment of 400 sets to the Vermont was made in July, before the regrettable disagreement arose between the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy League, and was by the Navy League forwarded on August 3 to the supply officer of navy yard, I presume the one at Norfolk.

Recently, without regard to the disagreement between Secretary Daniels and the Navy League, the Cleveland branch of the comforts committee officially joined the Cleveland Red Cross as the Navy auxiliary of the Red Cross, and my daughter is still chairman. It works at the Red Cross headquarters, 2625 Euclid Avenue, this city. Just before the change of location was made, but after it has been decided upon, the shipment of 10 cases for the Vermont and 10 cases for the Burrows was made by Adams Express, prepaid, addressed to the supply officer of the Norfolk Navy Yard.

This morning I am in receipt of letters, one from Hon. Josephus Daniels, stating that inasmuch as the Cleveland branch has officially joined the Cleveland Red Cross, the supply officer of the navy yard at Norfolk has been authorized to accept these cases.

Another, from the supply officer of the Norfolk Navy Yard, evidently written about simultaneously, states that in accordance with instructions from the Navy Department, they had returned the shipment to the Adams Express Co. at Portsmouth, Va., where it is being held.

I also have a letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Van Rensselaer Frazer, chairman of Comforts Committee of Navy League at Washington, stating that on August 3 the first shipment for U. S. S. Vermont of 400 sets of comforts was sent forward to the supply officer, Norfolk Navy Yard, but has not been received.

I also have, in same mail, letter from the commanding officer of the Vermont stating that he has written to the supply officers of the navy yards at Norfolk and Washington to endeavor to procure this shipment, which a previous letter stated was greatly needed.

Inasmuch as the sailors of our Navy, according to many letters we have received from various sources, already suffer from cold when standing watch and doing other deck duty, and will continue, as winter approaches, to be cold even if politics are hot; and, further, inasmuch as the 1,200 women knitting for the Cleveland branch of the Navy Auxiliary of the Red Cross, with many tens of thousands of other women all over the country, are patriotically anxious to increase the fighting efficiency of our sailors by alleviating as much of this suffering as possible, I implore you to endeavor to get this matter straightened out in such way as will permit these women, of nearly every city and township in the United States, to get the results of their work into the hands of those who need it so much. Differences of opinion between officials alter not a whit the suffering of our sailors from inclement weather.

I implore your earnest effort in straightening out this matter, and especially trust that through your aid the shipment made in July, which should long ago have been in the hands of those who need it so much, may be traced and delivery permitted.

For once I am writing you on something beside the postal question, and with my utmost earnestness.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES WM. BURROWS.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the order for which I got unanimous consent there was an express understanding that the debate would be confined strictly to the bill.

Mr. EMERSON. I appreciate that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] agreed that the bill should be considered with that understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was so advised by Mr. Speaker CLARK, who at the same time requested that if a Member departed from the order in that respect he should be called to order and compelled to keep within the subject.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I regard the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], supplemented by that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], as quite sufficient to warrant general support of this bill. I do not care to undertake to review the several arguments which have been made. I desire to support the exception which appears in the bill, and I think perhaps the House is entitled to some explanation of that situation. My only comment on the bill, aside from that, is that I desire it understood that it meets with my hearty approval under the circumstances now surrounding the country.

We are all, I take it, jealous of the coastwise trade, but the merits of this Government's policy in the maintenance of the coastwise trade are not at issue. Any one who reads the statement of the Commissioner of Navigation and gives it careful consideration can not but be convinced of the urgent necessity of some provision being made to take care of the serious situation which confronts the country at this time with respect to its tonnage.

I think the chairman gave the figures. I was unable to hear all of the statement. Our shipping in foreign commerce has increased approximately two and one-half times since the beginning of the war, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Navigation as it appears in the hearings; and while our increase of foreign tonnage, according to that statement, as I say, is about two and one-half times since the beginning of the war, it is largely due to the withdrawal of our tonnage from our own coastwise trade. In addition to that, it appears to be a conservative estimate that on account of transports to convey men and supplies for the purposes of the war there will necessarily be a further withdrawal from the coastwise trade of 1,000,000 tons of shipping. Therefore this bill is framed upon the theory not only of the conditions confronting us and of supplying that deficiency as expeditiously as possible in order to meet the cargo-carrying necessities of our seaboard, but also upon the theory that the way to accomplish that will be to take advantage of what is known as the leg of the journey. That is to say, a foreign ship discharging an import cargo or taking on an export cargo would, under this bill, be permitted to take on cargoes between American ports and discharge them at American ports, which it can not do under existing law. That is the primary purpose of the bill, and the primary thought of those who framed it, as shown by the hearings, although it may be that some neutral tonnage now tied up will undoubtedly avail itself of general entry into the coastwise trade for the limited time of the war and 120 days subsequent to the war.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HADLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that the foreign-going ships will take on board cargoes for different ports in America, rather than to take on a cargo for a single port, and load and go back?

Mr. HADLEY. If they have space between American ports available for taking on local cargoes, the theory of the bill is that they will take advantage of that, and thus relieve the congested condition existing in American ports, under permits from the Shipping Board.

Mr. MADDEN. I was rather inclined to think that even if they had a permit from the Shipping Board they would not take advantage of it, and that we would not be able to get the results which the bill seeks to obtain.

Mr. HADLEY. If they do take advantage of it, we are so much the gainers, and if not we have lost nothing in that respect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is there not danger of foreign-owned ships coming under this registry, and stopping in American ports and losing their seamen, who will step ashore and demand American wages?

Mr. HADLEY. That is under the jurisdiction of the Shipping Board, and these permits can be granted or revoked at will under regulations which they adopt.

Now, it was not my intention to go into a detailed discussion of the bill, but simply to give it my general indorsement. But I wish to explain an exception in the bill.

It will be noted that the provisions of the bill do not apply to coastwise trade in Alaska, or between Alaskan ports. Alaska is so situated that its ports are not on any of the great trade routes of the world. In fact, they are on no trade routes at all other than those between the States and Alaska. The distance from San Francisco to the outermost part of southwestern Alaska is about as great as to Honolulu. It is about 2,600 miles from Seattle to St. Michael, in the western part of Alaska, and it is some 700 miles from Seattle to the nearest port in southeastern Alaska. I think it is about 1,500 miles from Seattle to the central portion of southern Alaska. Therefore the conditions which are sought to be improved and benefited on the Atlantic coast and the Gulf coast do not obtain in Alaska. Under existing conditions a system of steamship lines has been built up with special reference to the Alaskan trade. There are four existing lines between Pacific ports and Alaska, comprising about 26 or 27 vessels which are peculiarly constructed with reference to that trade and are adequately serving its needs. This bill is introduced because there is a shortage of tonnage as to the general seaboard, but that does not exist in the case of Alaska.

The commercial necessities of the carrying trade of Alaska have always been adequately served, and are to-day, and the only way that there could be a deficiency would be by reason of the withdrawals of tonnage from those lines. The fact is that the vessels plying between the States and Alaska are of small capacity, are oil burning, of small radius, and are therefore not adapted to other uses, because they can not carry the round-trip fuel cargoes to European ports and oriental ports, where they do not have the oil for fuel. There are, however, in the vicinity of Alaska a number of foreign ships which are of equal capacity, or, in fact, better than foreign-built vessels from across the water, which belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, making 14 to 21 knots, or perhaps 25 knots, with a passenger-carrying capacity of, say, 1,000 or 1,500, that are adequately adapted to the transport service, but have not been called into the service of the allies, and so are available in Alaska if any of our vessels in the Alaskan trade were suitable to be diverted to the over-seas trade. If any of our vessels were withdrawn these would be substituted, and our American service from the Pacific ports to Alaska would be broken down.

There are many other specific reasons which might be stated why the coastwise trade of Alaska should be excepted logically associated with the statement I make pertaining to the diversion of trade between Alaska and American ports through the port of Prince Rupert and the Grand Trunk Pacific. Many other statements might be made with reference to that, which I do not deem necessary for the purposes of this discussion. The important fact is that the Alaskan trade always has been and now is abundantly served at a heavy expense to those engaged in it. There have been many losses of vessels engaged in the Alaskan trade, yet the people engaged in that carrying service have remained in it when they might have found it to their advantage if they had gone overseas, in so far as their vessels were adapted to the general sea trade. But they were not so adapted. They have retained their adherence and allegiance to the Alaskan trade. Under these conditions Alaskan cargoes should be carried in American bottoms to American ports and not be diverted by foreign vessels to foreign rail lines. After elaborate hearings upon this subject the committee reached the conclusion that the trade with Alaska ought to be exempted.

I think the House is entitled to this explanation of the exemption of the Alaskan coastwise trade. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, after reading the forceful report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, by its chairman [Mr. ALEXANDER], showing this bill to be a war necessity, one can hardly oppose it. Nevertheless, I feel inclined to say that I doubt if the bill will serve the full purposes for which it is intended, and I believe that it will make as much mischief as it will do good. I hope that it is not an entering wedge to break down American coastwise business.

Of course, the shipping laws, when they are amended as proposed in this bill, work one way on the Atlantic coast and another way on the Great Lakes and another way on the Pacific coast, and would have worked still a different way in Alaskan waters but for the amendment which my colleague [Mr. HADLEY] discussed. Much credit belongs to my colleague for his part in placing a guaranty in the bill that coastwise shipping between Alaskan and Pacific ports shall be saved to American ships. Prince Rupert should not be built up at our expense and by our voluntary gift.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know where this new shipping that is to go into our general coastwise trade is to come from. There may be a little picking up of cargoes to make one leg of a trip, but I doubt if it will amount to a great deal. I think that the bringing in of these vessels, even for temporary trips, will interfere with the American wage system. There is a great shortage of seamen now throughout the world. Seamen on these temporarily Americanized ships are likely to step ashore at ports on the coastwise trips and demand American wages. Other difficulties will come up. I submit that the hearings on this bill are well worth reading. I regret that I have not time to make some quotations from them.

But I want to place in the RECORD a statement from the Official Bulletin, published daily, under the order of the President, by the Committee on Public Information, George Creel, chairman, which has got to be quite a newspaper. If Members are not reading it, they are missing a better daily document than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself. It presents, boiled down, each day the proceedings of the House and the Senate, Army and Navy information, official information, prophecies and predictions of all kinds, including this:

UNITED STATES WILL HAVE 1,600 MERCHANT SHIPS, AGGREGATING 9,200,000 TONS, NEAR END OF 1918, SHIPPING BOARD BELIEVES.

[NOTE.—This statement was prepared with the assistance of the experts of the United States Shipping Board and approved by the full board. The figures may be regarded as definitely accurate.]

The United States has to-day 458 ships of over 1,500 dead-weight tons, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,871,359, either engaged in or capable of participating in foreign trade. There are also 117 ships of a tonnage of 700,285 of German and Austrian origin. The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation has commanded nearly 400 steel ships of more than 2,500,000 tons, which are being completed or under contract for construction in American yards. The board's fleet corporation has also contracted for 636 ships with a tonnage of 3,124,700. Totaled these figures show that the United States will have near the end of 1918 a merchant fleet of more than 1,600 ships, aggregating 9,200,000 tons, to carry its foreign commerce, as compared with an over-seas marine of 1,614,222 tons on June 30, 1914, scarcely a month before the European war began.

The tonnage referred to is exclusive of that engaged on inland waters, unsuitable coastwise ships, and small craft operating along the coast and in bays and harbors, and does not, of course, include the prospective additional program of the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The fleet in prospect is already becoming a reality. Several of the commanded ships are already taking cargo; others will leave the ways in increasing numbers with each succeeding month. The ships for which the Shipping Board has contracted are under construction, and the first launching is expected within 60 to 90 days.

That is the Shipping Board's estimate, and it is, I take it, not exaggerated. But look a few years ahead. When peace comes, what a shipping war there will be. Relieved of their warship construction, our allies will turn out ships 2 to our 1 and go after the trade of the world. They will offer subsidies to shipowners. We will not. And our big fleet, building now, will proceed to tie up at the docks, rot, and disappear to the bone-yard. All for the lack of a permanent shipping policy. We have failed in the past, and even now we are uncertain, undetermined, and that the facts are not to be had. In an effort to find out a little something about shipping, either prospective or present, one must go not only to the committee in Congress handling legislation but to the Shipping Board, the Emergency Fleet Board, and the Commissioner of Navigation, and so on; also the Department of Commerce.

This bill, as is stated, is put forward by the Shipping Board. Whether it is good or bad we do not know. No one will oppose it; we will vote for it because they ask for it. That is one of the penalties of a government by commissions and of making your commissions more important than Congress.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, it is proposed in this bill to allow foreign ships to go into the American coastwise trade. I do not see any special reason for admitting them into the coast-wise trade when you are depriving it of the largest item of commerce—that is, the bituminous coal tonnage. Take the bituminous coal interests of western Pennsylvania; in fact, those of the Nation, for that matter. As a Nation we produced last year 5,900,000 tons of bituminous coal. Three-fourths of that was produced in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, and Illinois. On the 23d of August of this year a price was fixed by the director of coal of $2 a ton on all the bituminous coal mined in Pennsylvania, an arbitrary price; $2.25 for selected sizes and $1.75 for slack. The effect of that has been, instead of increasing the production of bituminous coal, to diminish it. We have in western Pennsylvania, in Ohio and West Virginia five seams of coal that are mined and operated. The Connellsville seam is 7 feet in thickness, the Pittsburgh seam is 6 feet, the Kittanning 5 feet, and the Red Stone 4 and less, and Freeport of 4 to 6 feet in thickness. We have here an arbitrary price fixed applicable for all of these seams. The result has been that it has diminished the production of coal in western Pennsylvania, so that 61 mines in Westmoreland County, which I represent, have gone out of business since that price was fixed. The very first sentence in the price-fixing schedule issued by Commissioner Garfield was to the effect that the purpose for which he is appointed and the object of his work and of the work of his bureau, which now has expanded until it fills several buildings, is "to secure the largest possible production of fuel at prices just to the producer and reasonable to the consumer." With that in view he has fixed a price that is diminishing the output of these mines, causing labor to remain idle, and that, too, in the face of a coal scarcity which exists now throughout western Pennsylvania, which was evidenced last week by the great National Tube Works in McKeesport closing for two days because it did not have coal.

If that policy is pursued and relief is not given to the bituminous coal interests of western Pennsylvania there will be this winter a stringency in coal that will be felt not only among the domestic consumers but among the mills and large furnaces as well.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman says that the effect of this is to reduce all production. I wish he would explain in what way it reduces the production. Is it because the operators do not make so much profit and thereby they have reduced the output voluntarily, or why?

Mr. ROBBINS. Not at all. I shall explain it. The coal operators and miners and coal people generally are as patriotic as any set of business men in the country, and they propose to operate their mines as long as they can operate them at a fair profit. The President has said that profits and patriotism are not to be considered together; neither are bankruptcy and patriotism. The only reason why the output of coal in western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia is diminishing is because this price is not sufficient to warrant them in continuing the output, because they can not load the coal, the small operators, in the thin vein at $2 per ton, and I will tell you why. Take the costs of materials that enter into the production of coal, and this concerns 30 States of the Union and not alone the State of Pennsylvania. Compare the cost of the essential and necessary articles that go into the production of coal. For instance, take open-hearth steel. In 1914 it sold at 1½ cents a pound and to-day it sells at 5.35 cents per pound, being an increase of 257 per cent. Steel rails are used in every mine in the country, and they sold at $23.40 a ton in 1914, and to-day they are selling at from $95 to $105 a ton, and you can not get them always at that price. Steel plates costing then 1.15 cents per pound now cost 11 cents per pound, increase 857 per cent; angle steel used in building pit wagons costing 1.30 cents per pound, now cost 5.20 cents, increase 300 per cent; drivers' wages $3, now $4.12½; 6-foot posts 12 cents, now 30 cents; corn 70 cents per bushel, now $2.10, increase 300 per cent; exploder $2.55 per hundred, now $5.95 per hundred, increase 133 per cent; mine ties approximately $13 per thousand, now $25 per thousand, increase 87 per cent; mine-car wheels $1.75 per hundredweight, now $4.15 per hundredweight, increase 136 per cent. And thus I might continue to enumerate 50 articles used most essentially in the production of bituminous coal which all show an increase relatively as great as these essential articles I have given.

Now, bituminous coal is produced in Pennsylvania from three general classes of mines:

1. Domestic mines, which have been in operation for over a hundred years and furnished coal delivered by the owners to the villages and consumers, or hauled by the purchaser from the mines. These are not connected with railroads and furnish a vast amount of domestic fuel. No price-fixing program ought to be applied to these mines. They operate generally in winter. Many farmers' boys work in them that work on the farms in summer. The fuel that they supply can not be obtained from any other source, and there is no complaint of the price they charge, although they are compelled to advance their price and have advanced it, but to effect them by this price-fixing program has caused universal dissatisfaction throughout Pennsylvania. There never was any call for tampering with these. Realizing that this was a mistake, the fuel administrator, by a schedule designated 29 issued last week, had these mines taken out of the price schedule, so far as they supplied coal without transportation upon any railroad.

2. The second general class of mines in Pennsylvania furnishing bituminous coal is what is known as team-track mines, which were developed largely by reason of the high price of coal and its scarcity. These furnish coal to domestic consumers and also haul it in great quantities to railroads and load it on cars and ship it into the general trade. It is estimated in Butler and Westmoreland Counties there are over 250 of these mines. The coal is transported from the mines to the railroad by wagons, autotricks, and other means, and the cost of production in some instances is as high as $2 per ton. The price fixed by the fuel administrator of $2 will cause all these mines to stop, and, in fact, it is officially stated 61 of them have already closed and others similarly situated will close when their existing contracts expire. A coal operator estimates that in Westmoreland and Butler Counties the amount of coal that will be taken out of the market when these shut down will amount to approximately 25,000 tons per day, and these mines must close because they can not operate, and it is unfair to expect them to continue business at a loss. So that this price-fixing order instead of stimulating and increasing production is going to diminish it, and when these mines are once closed, equipment sold and dismantled, they will not go back into business again, when this $2 price has once closed them out.

3. The third class in western Pennsylvania operating in the bituminous-coal region is the railroad mines, where the coal is dumped from the mine car into the railroad car on the siding connected with the mine. These mines in the thick and thin veins are operated from drifts, slopes, and shafts. The shaft operations where water must be pumped, air supplied by fans, are expensive propositions and require a great amount of capital and large return to make their investment remunerative.

To fix a uniform price for all of these mines is an impossibility, unless the policy be established as suggested by the Federal Trade Commission, when it investigated the coal industry last June and filed a report thereon June 27, in which it said:

If a uniform price were fixed, many mines will be shut down unless the price is high enough to make the highest-cost mine profitable.

This fundamental principle was not followed by the fuel administrator. The price he fixed will make none of the mines profitable, unless it is the very fortunate drift low-cost mines, and will ultimately compel the shafts and thin-vein propositions to be abandoned.

While the Federal Trade Commission did not investigate western Pennsylvania conditions, in their report of the coal industry they did find conditions prevailing in West Virginia, Ohio, and Illinois similar to those that now prevail in western Pennsylvania. For instance, they stated:

The present production of bituminous coal the country over is about 40 per cent short of the possible maximum, and this limitation is solely to be charged, as to primary cause, to faulty rail transportation. The present demand for coal is unprecedented, but the mines now open are capable of filling this demand if adequate car supply is furnished.

This condition is one that prevails in western Pennsylvania, and if relieved by adequate railroad facilities the whole coal situation would work out entirely very soon under the law of supply and demand, as it did in 1900; but it can not be worked out, because the railroads are impeded by preferential movement of Government freight, and unable to secure additional equipment, because car-building establishments must supply foreign demand first.

The coal business, as the Federal Trade Commission further states—

For several years prior to 1916, it was a matter of general knowledge that the bituminous-coal industry of the United States was in an unsound condition.

Hence when they have received high prices during 1917 they should not be criticized too severely, because they were making up the losses for prior years.

The trouble with the coal industry at the present time results from three causes:

1. Lack of transportation.
2. Scarcity of labor.
3. High cost of supplies used in mining.

To fix a price of $2 per ton for bituminous coal will not relieve any of the above troubles. There are more mines in existence than ever, more coal developed, and more tonnage could be supplied, but the fact is that there is a shortage of coal both in New England and in the Northwest, and in fact in and around the Pittsburgh district such as never has existed before. Natural gas has been withdrawn as a fuel from the large manufacturing institutions and coal must be supplied in its place. The incidents cited above of the National Tube Works at McKeesport, in the very midst of the bituminous-coal district, which closed down two days last week for want of fuel, is only illustrative of conditions that exist throughout western Pennsylvania, both in domestic and public use. The public schools of Sharon and Youngstown and Pittsburgh are all threatened with a fuel famine. Therefore every possible means should be adopted to stimulate and encourage the production of bituminous coal. The announcement of the flat rate of $2 at the mine has had the reverse effect. As above cited, it has closed the small mines and it has placed some of the large companies at a great disadvantage. For instance, where a large company had a fuel contract with a railroad or with some large manufacturing that was at a very low rate, they expected the profits on the free coal to make up for the very unfortunate contract or for the low-priced contracts for railroad fuel which are always under the market.

Now, the $2 rate takes away this profit on the free coal and therefore makes the entire proposition a losing one even to the big operations.

There has been no complaint by the consumers when they paid $3 or even $4 per ton for bituminous coal. These consumers were using it for fuel in their factories, and making products on which they realized large profits, and they were willing to pay a liberal price for their fuel coal. This is true in all New England and the Northwest. In fact, there was little or no complaint of the $4 price. The exceptionally high price of coal was caused by speculators buying up and reselling, and not by the operators. If the fuel administrator would regulate this feature of the coal situation, he would strike the evil down and permit the industry to prosper and the public to be served.

The price-fixing program has been very unfair to bituminous coal. For instance, coke is fixed at $6 per ton. This indicates in all fairness that bituminous coal ought to be $3 per ton. Copper is fixed at 23½ cents per pound, when it is acknowledged on all hands that it can be produced at from 8 to 10 cents per pound. Just why bituminous coal has been singled out as the one commodity the price of which is fixed so low that few, if any, of the mines can produce it at the price is difficult to understand.

Under the existing price for supplies there are no mines in western Pennsylvania in the Pittsburgh and thinner seams—which are the standard fuel seams, because the Connellsville or 8-foot vein is all converted into coke and not sold for fuel coal—which can produce coal and leave a fair profit for the operator and a proper allowance for depletion at $2 per ton.

When the coal operators were called here in June last to confer with the Government about prices, Secretary Lane, Mr. Peabody, chairman of the coal-production committee, and probably 200 operators in session agreed that $3 was a fair price. After they had gone home, the following week that price was nullified, and the next official action was this price schedule of August 23, fixing it at $2 per ton, without notice to the coal operators and without having made any investigation into the existing conditions in western Pennsylvania. What reason is there why this order should not be suspended until an investigation is made? It was promptly suspended as to domestic consumers when it was discovered that it was unfair to them, and it is just as unreasonable to apply it to team-track mines or railroad mines without knowing the cost of production of each mine, or of each seam or district, as the existing conditions actually are.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that there is no more important matter coming before Congress than this one to correct the wrong done to the bituminous coal producers in this country. Although 30 States produce bituminous coal, it appears that in this body few, if any, raise their voice in behalf of this great industry. I am not asking any favors for this industry. I only ask fair treatment, and that only can be accorded after an investigation and determination of the facts controlling the production of coal.

The employees are now asking for an increase in wages, and the coal operators are willing to grant it, but if the $2 rate is to be maintained, it will be impossible to even give the miners the justice to which they are entitled. Hence, not only will this price-fixing program cause great suffering among the consumers of coal resulting from the lack of it, but it will cause great suffering among the working men, who will not be granted an increase of wages, which they are asking and deserve.

I bring this matter to the attention of the House at this time, as we are about to adjourn, so that right and justice may be done to this great industry at this time.

This price of $2 per ton should be suspended entirely as applicable to Pennsylvania, and if any price is to be fixed it ought only to be fixed after an investigation, and in no event should it be made to apply to domestic mines or to team-track mines. Any other course than this is going to cause great suffering and hardship throughout western Pennsylvania and the country supplied therefrom. The counties of Westmoreland and Butler, composing my district, last year produced 30,838,381 net tons of bituminous coal and gave employment to 22,071 miners. Therefore this industry is commanding in the district that I represent, and I ask justice for this great industry and this great number of workmen.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon alien conscription, and also to include some patriotic remarks on why the war came to America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENSON].

Mr. STEENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon the resolution which I had up a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I can add nothing to the persuasive force of the statements that have been made, particularly by the chairman of the committee and the senior member of our committee on the minority side, in urging the passage of this bill. I believe there is no reason why any man with any theory as to our merchant marine should refuse to support and vote for the bill. I want to say in reference to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] said a moment ago that I heartily agree with him that this kind of measure ought to have been passed long ago. The truth is that two months before this bill was introduced I introduced a bill myself attempting to accomplish just exactly the same purpose. It was not worded as this bill. It was simply a bill suspending all restrictions in our coastwise trade and permitting all ships to carry cargo and passengers in that trade during the period of the present war. As soon as I saw that the congestion at our seaport towns was largely because of the want of proper ship transportation, I introduced my bill. I think it was referred to the Shipping Board, but they did not at once act on it. At that time there was no little confusion in the condition surrounding the administration. The Shipping Board had just been practically gotten into operation. They were studying the great problems that the Nation was suddenly called on to solve. They failed at that time to take up the measure, but later they prepared the measure which was introduced by Judge ALEXANDER, and which, after full hearing by our committee, was finally reported out by us in the shape of the bill now before the House.

There have always been two theories with reference to coastwise navigation and shipping. One theory has been that each nation should reserve its coastwise shipping to vessels built within its own borders, as this guaranteed the existence of at least a modicum of shipping in case of great crises like the present war.

Our Government has proceeded under that theory, and under that theory for a hundred years we have lived, and we have built up a coastwise and inland merchant marine greater than that of any other country under the sun; but in doing that we deliberately cast away our foreign shipping. Under the stringent application of that theory for 60 years our over-seas merchant marine all vanished.

The other theory has been adopted by the English-speaking people, and they have said: "We will enter into competition with the world, and let the world enter into competition with us." The result of the English system of permitting participation in her coastwise trade of ships of other nations, of competition rather than exclusion, has been that England has maintained herself in her coastwise trade and also spread over the world a greater foreign-going merchant marine than any other the world ever saw.

Mr. ROBBINS. If the gentleman will permit, does not England exclude altogether foreign vessels from participating in her coastwise trade?

Mr. HARDY. Most emphatically no. On the contrary the English open their coastwise trade to the vessels of all nations, and they have, as far as they have been able, negotiated treaties with many other nations by which they secure reciprocal rights in their coastwise trade. Our coastwise monopolists always assert that we are unable to compete, and therefore must exclude ships of other nations from our coast trade. But I do not want to go into that. It is theory, it is an argument, it is a practice, and those are the facts with reference to England and the United States. France has kept her coastwise trade to herself, and Italy hers also, I think; and they, like we, have not prospered in their over-seas shipping. I might discuss these matters, but I will ask leave now to extend my remarks in order that I may discuss that feature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY. I will not take up the time now, as we are not here passing on that question. It is deemed for the present emergency on the Lakes that an exchange of facilities of Canadian ships and American ships will help afford the tonnage both Canada and the United States now need. Then, Mr. Speaker, there are ships, as was said by the gentleman from Washington, going from New York, for instance, to Galveston or Mobile empty, which may now help to relieve the present freight congestion if, as permitted under this bill, they may carry some of the freight that is piled up now at our seacoast ports, and all parties agree that during this war that measure of relief is beneficial.

Now, there is another matter that I might go into. I was opposed to the exemption of the Alaskan trade from this bill, because if there was no need of such shipping there there would be no application of its provisions made in that trade, but in order that we might all agree, I am perfectly willing to let the bill be put through as it is presented. I think it a mistake to exempt Alaska from the bill on the ground that there is now ample transportation there, because even the gentleman from Washington says there may in the future be a shortage there. But I want relief for the rest of the country. I want action.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any more reason for exempting the effects of this bill so far as Alaska is concerned than the Great Lakes?

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman from Washington made an explanation of that. If the gentleman had asked him that question he could have given him perhaps more of the facts in favor of the exemption than I can, I being opposed to the exemption.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman said he did not see any reason, and it struck me there is no greater reason for exempting the Alaskan trade than the Great Lakes. I understood the gentleman to say he did not approve of the exemption, or he did not believe there was any need for it.

Mr. HARDY. I can tell you the reasons assigned before the committee; and by the way, I think the shrewdest lawyer I ever saw came before that committee, a gentleman by the name of Clark, who presented the claims of the Alaskan shipping interests so strongly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not only the Alaska question, but many other questions.

Mr. HARDY. Yes; besides this Alaskan exemption matter he covered the world, and then some.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And made one of the most interesting statements which has been printed.

Mr. HARDY. He made a very interesting argument and a very fallacious but very persuasive one, in my opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish the House to understand that the bill does not represent the views of the committee?

Mr. HARDY. I think every member of the committee, except myself and one or two others, were persuaded by Mr. Clark that it was proper to make this exemption, and while I am not persuaded at all, I am willing to yield my independent judgment, believing I do not know it all, and especially as it is relatively of little practical moment, in order to get harmonious and speedy action.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought perhaps the gentleman was speaking the sentiment of the entire membership of the committee when he suggested that Mr. Clark persuaded them to do something which was not to the best advantage of the country.

Mr. HARDY. No; the gentlemen who voted this bill out of the committee do not think it bad for the country. On the contrary, gentlemen, this measure is on the whole very urgently needed for the good of the country. I believe we all heartily agree it should pass. Some of us think it should pass without this exemption, but all of us agree that the measure as it stands is a wise measure and a necessary measure, and ought to pass without delay, and I believe most of us think it ought to have been passed some time ago.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand this bill, and our coastwise laws as they are now, the object of the bill is to get all of the tonnage of the world that we can get?

Mr. HARDY. And use it when we need it.

Mr. CANNON. And use it during this war and 120 days thereafter?

Now, let us see how it works out practically. I want to see if I understand it. Some people are greatly afraid of Japan. I have never been in terror of that country. She has her hands full for better profit than she could get by quarreling with us.

As I understand it, a Japan ship, manned by Japanese officers and seamen, none of whom could speak our language, can enter into our coastwise trade, as a Norwegian ship can or any other ship that could go into that trade, because we need a portion of our ships that have been in that trade to cross the Atlantic to Europe in our foreign trade and to transport troops?

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman is exactly right, with this qualification, that the Japanese ship makes the voyage and carries the freight from one of our ports to another only whenever the Shipping Board wants it and authorizes it.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, as I understand; and I think that is a very useful provision in the bill. But it goes without saying that it will be authorized, because we will need it during this war period?

Mr. HARDY. It certainly goes without saying it will be authorized, if we need it, and I think we will need it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I did not aim to consume the gentleman's time. Does he desire more time?

Mr. HARDY. No. I have said all I wish to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, there is no further time asked for on this side.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: Page 1, line 3, after the word "war," insert the words "with Germany."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOUSTON: Page 2, at the beginning of line 9, strike out the words "And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take issue with the gentlemen who favor this feature in the bill. However, I am very much in favor of the passage of this bill as it was originally introduced and before this amendment was offered in the committee and added to it. I believe in these hours of great trial and stress, when every interest and every strength and every resource of this country should respond and respond readily to meet the great call that is now made upon American strength and American manhood in every form, we should utilize every resource; that there is no interest of any kind the promotion or protection of which would justify us in failing to subordinate that protection, to subordinate that upbuilding in order to serve our country in this great struggle that, I say, calls for America's best in every respect; and every patriotic citizen ought to respond, as our boys will respond who are called on to make their sacrifice.

Now, I do not favor the exemption of Alaska from the benefits of this bill. I can see no reason to justify that. If it is good to utilize the vessels that are on our seacoasts, all around this continent, to use any foreign shipping in order to supply the needs of the war, why is it not good to use such as are available upon the Alaskan coast? If there are any advantages to be gained by the shipping interests along the coast, I mean the people who have goods and materials to ship, by admitting foreign vessels into this shipping and suspending our coastwise laws, why not allow the people of that country to have the advantage fully?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. I would rather not yield now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What ships could come there?

Mr. HOUSTON. I decline to yield. I will yield to the gentleman later.

I say this, gentlemen, that whatever advantages may come from the suspension of the present coastwise laws should go to Alaska. Our laws now give a monopoly to American ships. I do not favor that and have never favored that. I do not think it is justified. It is a system of protection and upbuilding at the expense of others that I do not believe in.

But, however that may be, it is not involved here. The necessities for this bill are so manifest that all men, I think, will realize the importance of it as a whole. But, I say, what justification there can be for excluding Alaska from whatever benefits may incidentally come I am unable to comprehend. There is no part of the Government that needs healthy competition so far as easy transportation is concerned so much as the people of Alaska need it. There is no shipping between any ports on the United States coast where there is such a high rate charged by the transportation lines that carry the freight from one port to another as those which carry the freight from the Pacific ports to Alaskan ports. Now, a little healthy competition there would be of very great service to the people of Alaska. It would give more reasonable rates and cheaper transportation, and if that is to be an incident of the passage of this bill, why should they not have it?

The facts are that the transportation lines, the Alaskan Steamship Co., and the other companies that I might name in connection with the owners of the great interests there, are so interlocked and interwoven with each other that you can not tell who they belong to; but you can discover the fact that all belong to the same set of men, more or less.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry; a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe we are proceeding in the House, and the gentleman offers an amendment. Is he not entitled to one hour after he has been recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not need that time. Now, the rates from Seattle to Cordova are just about three times as much as they are from New York to New Orleans, or from New York to Galveston, a greater distance by several hundred miles. From Seattle to Cordova is 1,581 miles. From New York to New Orleans it is 1,698 miles. To Galveston it is about twenty-one hundred and some odd miles. I believe those figures are accurate. And yet the rates charged from Seattle to Cordova are near three times the rates from New York to Galveston, and why should they be permitted to do that? Why should not the common law of justice and fair play let those people have some competition from Canadian or other vessels that can come there and haul their traffic and their freight at a reasonable rate?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Not now. There are many people in Alaska who are suffering from these high rates of transportation. Mark you, those who are controlling the shipping are not suffering. They to an extent own the Alaskan Syndicate property and the smelting and mining company property and the fishing industries, and, mind you, the two great interests are the fishing and the copper interests. These men are interested in the Alaskan Steamship Co., and they are hauling their own goods. They can charge whatever they please. It makes no difference because they pay it into their own pockets.

But there is another class of people in Alaska. We are undertaking to develop that great country. We are expending money to build a railroad there, with a view to advancing American citizenship, with a view to developing Alaska for American settlement by American citizens. They have sold town sites and town lots along this road in large numbers. Americans are attempting to build their homes there. They want to get nails to build their houses with. They want to get lumber to build their houses with. They need hardware in connection with the construction of their houses. And yet to ship the hardware used in those buildings from Seattle to Cordova costs $9 a ton, whereas for a much greater distance on the Atlantic coast or any other coast it will cost about $3.50 per ton. These men want to buy plows. They want to do agricultural work there. They are succeeding in that. They want to buy shovels and picks and hoes, and when those implements are brought up there by the steamship company they have to pay those enormous rates. It is a burden upon American citizens in Alaska who ought to have relief.

Not only that, but the United States is intensely interested in the copper and fish that come from there. Take the copper, for instance, the most useful article, almost, that we have need for in this great war now existing, which is being shipped out of there. I do not suppose the shipping has much to do with the price of that. It does not affect it, because the same men to a large extent own both the copper and the transportation facilities.

But the fishing industry is one of the great industries up there. I do not think all of this industry is owned by the large companies. There is food there in great abundance. We talk about the conservation of food. We talk about saving for the American people, saving everything we can in order to furnish supplies for our armies and soldiers and people at home. And yet here is a product that is recognized to be one of the best foods for our Army that can be found—this fish, this salmon, this halibut—and yet, so far as that article is concerned, it is subjected to this same high rate of transportation.

Now, it is claimed that not to exempt Alaska from the provisions of this bill will divert American trade from America and Alaska into Canadian markets. Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that I suppose nobody will question that the fishing industries in Alaska are owned by Americans. American citizens own them almost entirely. I suppose there may be some few exceptions but not many. They own the fisheries, and when it comes to shipping their supply to a market they will send it where they please. They can send it to America, to Seattle, to San Francisco, or to any other Pacific port, and I take it they will do so because they are interested in America and are patriotic Americans and want to build up American trade. If they want to send it to Canada they can do so now without any trouble in the world. If there is an inducement to send their fish there, sufficient to overcome their patriotic desire to build up their own country, they can send it there in their own vessels. They have got them. They have nothing to do but to send them there. So that there is nothing in that.

Now, then, this argument that to permit Canadian vessels to engage in the coastwise shipping in Alaska would divert trade is met by the provision in the bill that I want to call your attention to now, "that the Shipping Board shall limit and define the scope of the trade." This bill is carefully drawn. It was an admirable bill as it was first presented, before the committee was induced to amend it. This Shipping Board shall limit and shall define the scope of the trade. They can direct where that trade shall be shipped to. They can tell where it shall go. They can tell at what time, and so forth, it shall be shipped, so that the Shipping Board can amply protect American interests and American trade.

Yet the argument is made that the bill is only to provide ships when they are needed, and that none are needed in Alaskan waters. I want to direct your attention now to this: This assumes a condition that is impossible to foretell. Why not leave this to the judgment of the Shipping Board upon whatever conditions may arise?

If the Shipping Board has the power to fix these rates, we all know that fair competition is the best rate regulator in the world.

How many of us have had our attention called to the fact that when the Interstate Commerce Commission has fixed reasonable railroad rates for the transportation of freight a little water transportation has cut that reasonable rate away down below the figures fixed by the commission or other tribunal. If the Shipping Board has the power to fix these rates, why not let the people have the benefit of this competition? Why, by the insertion of this proviso exempting Alaska, utterly deprive the Shipping Board of any power whatever under this bill to afford relief to the Government or the people of Alaska?

It is said that there are plenty of vessels up there. That statement was made before the committee and printed in the hearings, that there are plenty of vessels up there to carry that traffic. In another instance it is said that they do not need these vessels anywhere else, because they are not suited for over-seas transportation. We see in the morning paper that the Shipping Board is to commandeer all vessels of 2,500 tons or more after October 15. When we come to Alaska, what have they got up there? I was interested in the statement on the subject in the hearings. It was stated that there are about four steamship companies in operation there, that the Alaska Steamship Co. operate 16 vessels and that 8 are operated by the three other companies. It is said that most of them are small; but when the question was asked in detail it was stated that out of the 16 owned by the Alaska Steamship Co. 12 had a tonnage of from 1,800 to 3,000 tons. In the fleet are a number of vessels that will be commandeered by the Shipping Board, if they exercise the power they have; and if this bill passes with this proviso in it the Shipping Board can commandeer these vessels of 2,500 tons and take them out of these waters, and the people up there will not be able to get a Canadian ship or a ship from any foreign government to carry their fish to market, but the fish will spoil on the docks, as they have in several instances, for want of adequate shipping facilities.

What are the facilities up there? There are the Alameda, tonnage 3,158; the Alaska, tonnage 3,709; the Valdez, 2,382; the Juneau, 2,382; the Eureka, 2,300, and so on; about 10 of them ranging at the figures I have given. When they say vessels of 2,500 tons are to be commandeered, that means dead weight. But these figures do not represent dead weight, and when you include the dead weight, which I understand means also the coal necessary to carry these ships on their voyages, every one of these vessels will be found to be above the size that the Shipping Board have already decided they will commandeer for the use of the Government. Suppose they take these ships. Of course, I take it they will exercise their wise discretion and not be reckless or extravagant, but suppose that through dire necessity they take them. Who will carry on the trade between Alaska and our Pacific ports? Who will carry the fish to market?

I see in this paper, the Official Register, which was highly complimented by my friend and colleague on the Committee on Territories, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], that the United States has to-day 458 ships of over 1,500 tons dead weight, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,871,000, either engaged in or capable of participating in foreign trade. The point I want to emphasize is that it will be far better, certainly it will be far wiser, for this House to strike out that provision and let the Shipping Board in its discretion determine what shall be done up there. If you keep this amendment in the bill you paralyze their arm and they can not do anything to aid transportation, no matter what conditions may arise. If you strike it out they can exercise the power under the discretion given them by the bill and can make such use of it as the best interests of that country and of the whole country shall demand.

In the hearings on this bill J. H. Burch, general freight and passenger agent of the Alaska Steamship Co., stated that that company is operating 16 vessels between Pacific ports and Alaska, 12 of which run from 1,800 to 2,000 tons, 2 of 2,800 tons, and 1 of 3,000 tons.

Mr. HADLEY, an honored Member of this House, states that there has been no necessity yet, so far as Alaska is concerned, for this legislation, but that there may be before we are through. Now, suppose Mr. HADLEY stated the situation correctly. The only way to get the benefit of the conditions that may arise is to give discretion to the Shipping Board and let them exercise that discretion as they see proper. All of this demonstrates that the Shipping Board should have the power to do whatever the necessities of the case require, in order to relieve the coastwise shipping.

I understand from parties in Alaska that there is not an abundance of shipping facilities there; that often there are times when they can not get their supplies in from Seattle and San Francisco and other Pacific coast ports for the want of facilities to carry them. I understand there is great delay sometimes in getting materials into Alaska. I am told this by people from Alaska that the men who want to build houses, who want to go to work, can not readily get their material there.

Right along this line I want to call attention to what appears in the Daily Alaska Dispatch on Sunday, September 9. Here are the headlines:

Heavy loss on halibut—$5,000 worth of fish spoiled—The lack of steamer space becoming a serious matter to buyers and fishermen.

The article says:

Five thousand dollars worth of halibut, salmon, and cod lies on the Juneau wharves, rotting for lack of steamer space to transport it south.

Now, gentlemen of this House, with conditions like that, would it not be right and just to allow a Canadian vessel that might be sailing in those waters, that might easily have the opportunity to carry some of those fish to market, to relieve the congestion by doing so? Will you let them rot on the wharves and will you let the people who toiled to get those fish lose the opportunity of getting them to market rather than interfere with the building up of a private interest engaged in the shipping in Alaska? This article further continues:

Yesterday halibut boats sold their cargoes for 10½ cents in expectation that the fish could be iced, boxed, and shipped south on the Farragut yesterday noon.

The Farragut refused to take the fish for want of cargo space, and an appeal made by the freezer men that enough canned salmon be unloaded to make room for the iced fish went unheeded.

The question of getting the iced fish from southeastern Alaska ports will be presented to the Merchants' Protective Association. Not only was the Juneau shipments left on the docks to rot, but Douglas, Petersburg, and other ports were equal sufferers.

The halibut boat Rolfe is anchored in the roadstead with a capacity cargo of halibut without an offer. The freezers are afraid to touch her cargo because of no available vessel south within the next few days.

This statement appears in an Alaska paper, and I read it for what it is worth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, viewed from every standpoint, it seems to me that this amendment ought to go out. It is not necessary in order to save the trade in Alaska. It would be a gross injustice to the people of Alaska to force them to submit to conditions that may arise in the emergencies of war, cutting off their facilities and damaging their business. I know very well that there are a part of the people in that country, who perhaps own the Alaska Steamship Co. and the copper mines, who might get their output shipped; but there are others who are not able to command those facilities, who do not own vessels, and when they want to ship their output what will be done with it if a great shortage in vessels results from the war condition?

What injustice can be done any interest by striking out this provision and leaving the bill as it was first presented and in the condition I understand it was when approved by the President and Secretary of Commerce? I want to emphasize the fact that the bill as first introduced did not contain this provision excluding Alaska from its benefits. Alaska will be capable of furnishing much support in the way of fish for our armies and people and copper for the use of our armies.

These transportation companies should furnish reasonable rates to the people of Alaska. The United States should have the benefit of cheap transportation of the great amount of fish taken from Alaskan waters. When our people are in need of conserving food of every sort to feed our people and to supply our soldiers in this war, why should these companies be secured in the opportunity to charge high rates for transportation?

We should save everywhere and allow none to extort from our people, all of whom are engaged in this great struggle for human freedom and in the defense of our existence as a free people.

Our boys are called on to stake their lives, and will do so nobly, and we should allow no special interest to make their support more difficult by engaging in uninterrupted monopoly.

I do not think it will be questioned that the fishing industries of Alaska are owned by Americans. They can have their fish shipped wherever they please. The same people largely own all the industries in Alaska—the copper, the fish industries; also the transportation lines. It is a long story to show the combinations and the interlocking interests of these companies doing business in Alaska. Suffice to say that by understandings and arrangements satisfactory to themselves they have fixed a very high rate that is a burden to the people of Alaska.

I believe we should give the President full and complete power to exercise every activity or agency of the Government in this trying time. The executive department, in every branch and at every place, should have a free hand in the conduct of this war and in doing these things that will give strength to our armies and support to our people. There will be no need to discriminate against the people of Alaska and deny them a benefit that the Shipping Board, in its wisdom, might see proper to provide for them and also for the benefit of our whole country.

Let the people get their necessities as cheaply as possible. Let them get their hardware, their plows, hoes, picks, and shovels at reasonable rates. Let us get the great supply of food that comes from the fish there. Let the copper come as cheaply as possible. And speaking of copper, surely the copper men are reaping enormous profits. Copper that is costing between 5 and 6 cents a pound, selling at the amazing price of 27 to 30 cents a pound, shows what this industry is doing. I understand the war industries board has cut that price down to 23½ cents a pound. Why this reduction is so small, by the commission in charge, I do not understand. We need copper immensely for war purposes, and we need cheap coal that is there in great abundance, and it is expected that we will be able to get that out next year.

I have stood firmly for every emergency measure put forward by this administration. I believe every loyal American will stand by our great chieftain in this terrible war—this war in which we are fighting for our very existence as a free and self-respecting Nation.

We have called our young men to do battle for our liberty, our honor, and the freedom of mankind. And nobly will they do their part.

And, Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to criticize the wealth of our country, for in the main it is responding with lofty patriotism, but there should be no exception made to protect any special interest and to enable it to exact high rates when so much of the flower and the manhood of our fair land will be called upon to make the supreme sacrifice.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the committee stated when he brought the bill up, there is no disposition whatever to cut off debate. Ample time will be given for any discussion of the bill, but we do not want the debate to run on with the right of each Member now to get an hour instead of five minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not possible by unanimous consent to agree on a certain length of time to discuss this amendment?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I was about to say that under the parliamentary conditions I am entitled to an hour. I am willing to yield out of that hour to anyone who wants to discuss the bill, but I want to demand the previous question within the hour.

Mr. DOWELL. I would like to have 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa 10 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, this is an important amendment, and it ought to be thoroughly considered by the House before it is passed upon. In the first place, under the provisions of the bill an exception is made in the case of Alaska. Just why that exception is made I have been unable to understand. In the bill we are trusting entirely to the judgment of the Shipping Board. We give this board every power except in one instance, and we tell them that they must not tread upon the shores of Alaska.

Under this bill, it provides that the Shipping Board shall give a license to each ship that is transacting business along our coast. Is there any reason why, can anyone suggest why, this authority, if granted to every other part of the United States, should not be allowed along the coast of Alaska? Reference was made to the eloquence of gentlemen who appeared before the committee. May I suggest that there are possible reasons why the gentlemen who were before the committee made such eloquent appeals that Alaska should be excepted from the provisions of this bill?

Alaska is controlled, or at least a number of companies in Alaska are controlled, by a syndicate of a few men known as the Guggenheim interest. That is the interest that is controlling the shipping of Alaska and is controlling the copper output of that country. I am wondering if the eloquence that was spent on the committee in the hearings on this bill was really in the interest of American trade, or was it in the interest of a few men who are controlling these corporations that are now operating in Alaska? I want to call your attention to just a few matters, for I have not time to go into all of it.

I call attention to Poor's Manual of 1917, which I believe is good authority anywhere. On page 2036 I read with reference to the copper mines of Alaska:

There was therefore produced from the corporation's Alaskan mines during 1916 a total of 126,087 tons of shipping ore and concentrates containing 56,141 net tons, or 112,282,000 pounds of copper, or an average copper tenor to the ton of 44.53 per cent.

The cost of production in the Kennecott Copper Corporation, as reported in this volume on page 2037, is as follows:

There was received at smelter during year, after allowing for smelter deductions, 108,372,783 pounds of deliverable refined copper. Total cost of production per pound of copper was 5.10 cents in 1916 as against 4.54 in 1915.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had some price fixing in this country in the past few weeks, and, as I am advised, the price of copper that was heretofore selling for 27 cents, or 25 cents, perhaps, has been fixed at 23½ cents. By the statement I have just read, which takes into consideration the mining and milling, freight to smelter, smelting and refining, selling expense, general expense, marine insurance, and all other expenses, the actual cost of production was 5.10 cents. In other words, the price that has been fixed gives them a profit now of approximately 400 per cent over the actual cost of production. The price fixed is some reduction but by no means adequate.

Now, on page 2039 of Poor's Manual I read, under the head of "Companies controlled by the Kennecott Copper Corporation," "Alaska Steamship Co.," which is one of the steamship companies that has largely the monopoly of the coast trade on the Alaskan coast.

I want to ask you gentlemen are you willing to permit the Shipping Board to control all the shipments in all of the ports of the United States except Alaska and permit a company that is controlled by a corporation making 400 per cent on the actual cost price of its production to have a monopoly on the shipping business in Alaska.

Now, I want to call your attention to a contract with the Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I can not; my time is so short. I call attention to the Pacific Coast Steamship Co., which, as I understand, is another one of these corporations controlled by this same organization of men. This is a blank I am reading from, headed "Pacific Coast Steamship Co." This is a provision for rebates:

Upon surrender by the second party of original paid freight bills quarterly, say, in April, July, October, and January, rebate will be made by first party according to the following schedule: On freight payment aggregating $500 up to $5,000, ranging from 27 to 35 per cent.

This contract, as I am advised, was discontinued something like a year ago.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Not now. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] a few minutes ago called attention to the fact that people in Alaska are unable to secure shipments over this line. What harm can come, I ask you, if you leave this question to the Shipping Board as you have left it in every port of the United States except upon the coast of Alaska? If these men are honest enough and capable enough to trust in all of the other ports, why can you not trust them in the ports of Alaska to control the shipping of materials there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rowe].

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, in answer to some remarks of the last speaker I would like to say that he should have looked up the law which created the Shipping Board and gave it its powers. If there are any irregularities as to the prices charged for carrying freight in the Alaskan trade, the Shipping Board has full power not only to regulate the rates but to reduce them or increase them. We created the Shipping Board last year and gave them that power. There is not simply one shipping line, but if the gentleman had read the hearings he would have found that there are four shipping lines between the United States ports and Alaskan ports—the Alaska Steamship Co., the Pacific Coast Steamship Co., the Humboldt Steamship Co., and the Seattle Steamship Co.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWE. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not a fact that the Alaska Steamship Co. controls three times the tonnage of all of the other companies combined?

Mr. ROWE. I presume it does. I am not aware of the fact, but I presume it does control more. It is the larger company.

Mr. KNUTSON. And that is owned by the Guggenheims, is it not?

Mr. ROWE. No; I believe not.

Mr. CANNON. It is very material whether those wicked people own it.

Mr. ROWE. I do not know who owns it. It did not appear in the testimony.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is not that steamship company owned very largely by men who are the chief owners in the Copper River mines, the Kennecott mines, the Mining & Smelters Co., and also the Alaska Syndicate?

Mr. ROWE. I am not sure about that, but I think perhaps the Representative from Seattle could tell us.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will examine it, he will find that the same men are officers and managers for all of them.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, we are not here to denounce capital in any one particular, as far as I can see. We created the Shipping Board for no other purpose than to correct irregularities and unjust treatment of shippers by different shipping companies, and to reduce if necessary the rates, and they have charge of this absolutely and for all time, regardless of this bill. The fact is that there are only three vessels owned to-day by American companies of over 2,500 tons weight engaged in the Alaska trade that could be thought of at all by the United States Government for over-seas trade. On the other hand, the Grand Trunk Railroad Co. of Canada, which has its port at Prince Rupert, has a fleet of ships in the Alaskan trade. They are seeking this trade, to carry it to Prince Rupert and by railroad through Canada, and take it away from American shippers via Seattle or some other Pacific port. I would like to have the gentleman who offered this amendment tell the committee just what proportion of those vessels the Canadian Government has taken away from the Alaskan trade. The evidence before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was that not a single vessel, and there are five or more of over 2,500 tons that are good for over-seas trade, has been taken by Canada or England to use in the over-seas trade.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will not the argument be used as soon as the attempt is made to commandeer these vessels that they are absolutely necessary in the coast trade of Alaska?

Mr. ROWE. The statements and all of the evidence before the committee were that every boat in the Alaska trade was absolutely necessary at this time, and that if you take them away it would force the trade to the English boats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as a junior member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries it has not been my purpose to take any part in this debate. I feel that the statements with regard to the necessity for this legislation as a war-emergency measure have been fully covered by the remarks that have been made by members of the committee and others. It has now developed, Mr. Speaker, that there is not very much general opposition to the bill, except on the proposition as to the wisdom and propriety of the exemption; that is, with reference to the exemption of the Alaskan trade from the provisions of the bill. My experience as a member of this Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is, of course, brief, because I am a new Member of the House. I went into these hearings as they were presented by those who are supposed to have knowledge of the facts involved with an absolutely open mind, without any interest one way or the other, either on the Pacific coast or anywhere else, living as I do far inland, and I profess no knowledge of maritime affairs. The members of the Shipping Board appeared before the committee and made a statement, and the representatives of the different shipping interests of the country, from the eastern seaboard and, I think, possibly representing the Lake ports and Alaskan and Pacific ports, presented these suggestions for the consideration of the committee. It appeared to the majority of that committee that a good case, as it were, was made out in favor of the exemption of the Alaskan coastwise trade. In the first place, it was developed in the hearings that this coastwise trade, the United States trade with Alaska, had been built up possibly with great sacrifices and through a long period of years, and that the shipping now available, owned by Americans, was barely sufficient to carry on the trade between Alaskan and United States ports. It was developed in addition to that, that plying these waters, and probably owned by Canadian trunk railroads, were a number of Canadian and English steamers of equal capacity and greater than those owned by the American shipping interests, which were available for trade and which were available, some of them, for over-seas use in military expeditions, that had not been taken out of that normal freight service by the English Government. It further developed in the hearings, and it was a fair and open hearing and everybody had an opportunity to be heard, it seems to me, that it was the purpose, if possible, of these great Canadian railroad companies, through this species of legislation, to attempt to monopolize and drive out of business the American shipping interests as affecting Alaska. It developed there without controversy—

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. CANNON. If that be true, would not Canada, with her railroad interests intertwined with ours, get much greater profit if she would devote her shipping to the coastwise trade, which is a hundred times more valuable under this bill, than she would by promoting her trade in the Alaskan ports?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that I think that would be undoubtedly true.

Mr. HADLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. HADLEY. Is it not true that the hearings developed the fact that Canadian trunk railroads were adhering to a policy of stimulation as against American shipping by reduction of rates one-third less than the rate of American lines and sustaining that loss for the purpose of making them a feeder of the Canadian lines?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is undoubtedly the undisputed testimony.

Mr. HADLEY. And build up a diversion of trade, and when the diversion has been accomplished and American lines have been sacrificed to that trade, they would have a monopoly?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. Speaker, right in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] there was read into the Record from the hearings a statement that purported to have been made by one of the officials of the Canadian railroad bearing upon this subject, which I desire to call to the attention of the House. It is as follows:

J. D. McAuley, traveling freight and passenger agent for Alaska, with headquarters in Prince Rupert, passed Juneau on the Prince George last night, making the round trip to Skagway on that steamer. On the return of the George Mr. McAuley will stop off here for several days before returning south. Mr. McAuley has many friends in Juneau, having been stationed here for many years previous to being transferred to Prince Rupert.

Mr. McAuley and the officers of the Prince George freely predicted last night that within six months the United States and Canadian Governments will reach an agreement whereby the Canadian steamers will be plying coastwise and carrying local freight and passengers between American ports for the period of the war.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMONDS. That statement was made on July 13, after this legislation had been originated by the Shipping Board here, and appeared in the Alaskan Daily Empire.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

It is stated further:

Mr. McAuley stated that this arrangement is now in force on the Great Lakes and that the American and Canadian boats are working both freight and passengers between two Canadian ports as the case may be.

It is stated that the rumors are going the rounds of transportation circles that the United States Government is planning on taking over the larger of the Seattle-San Francisco steamers to be followed by the larger of the Alaskan steamers, leaving the Canadian boats, which are not suitable for trans-Atlantic service and the smaller American boats, to handle the Alaskan trade, the San Francisco trade to be handled by the railroads.

There is a proposition which developed the fact that, if carried into execution, it seemed to me, would, in my judgment, have been a great hardship upon the owners of American vessels. But it seems to me that the objection to this limitation of the bill excepting Alaskan trade is met in large terms by the statement that has been made in this debate by more than one Member that the Shipping Board of the United States, under authority now vested in it by law, has absolute authority and jurisdiction to take up and to consider, to define, and regulate any question of discrimination with reference to freight rates between Alaskan ports and ports of the United States.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does not the gentleman admit that that only affects one feature of it, and that one feature is whether or not they are charging too high rates, but does not have anything to do with the relief that might come if vessels were commandeered or taken or a shortage should come in any way?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the gentleman to make the complaint differently.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was one of the complaints.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Tennessee admits this Shipping Board has authority and jurisdiction to regulate and control the proposition?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say that the Shipping Board nor any other board has ever created lively, healthy competition, and I endeavor to illustrate it by the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission, where water rates come in competition with railroad rates.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not yield for an argument.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that rebates are forbidden in the shipping bill and may be rejected by the Shipping Board, and if investigation is made you will find that there are no rebates in the Alaskan trade to-day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was not apprised of that situation, because, as I say, I have had a very short experience.

Mr. Speaker, that is all I desire to say upon the proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I find out how my time stands? How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 26 minutes left.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, my information is that the shortage of tonnage in this country is in the tonnage between Atlantic seaports and Europe. There is no reported shortage of tonnage between American ports in the coastwise trade. Where is the interest to our country beneficially affected if an American ship is taken off the coastwise trade and a foreign ship is put in the coastwise trade? Wherein are we increasing the over-seas trade?

There is a problem in mathematics for you. I hope the committee has considered that feature of it. I am not wholly satisfied with this bill, but as it is a war measure I shall support it. But I want to talk for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, upon this Alaskan exception. I live in Seattle. I have spent some years of my life in Alaska, and I know some of the conditions there. It is peculiarly one of those countries where there is no rail competition with water shipments, and it is the only place in continental United States or under the American flag on American soil where such a condition exists.

I would not undertake to discuss with my colleague from Iowa the question of what is best for the Iowa corn growers, but whenever a gentleman from Iowa comes out to my country, and knows nothing about it except what he reads, I think his judgment as to our condition is not on a par with mine. There is no complaint on the Pacific coast of the shortage of tonnage to an Alaskan port. It is a dangerous passage from Puget Sound to Alaska. The trade has been built up under the American flag by a slow and tedious and expensive process, and since we have established it there has to-day come in an English company, subsidiary to the transcontinental English and Canadian railroads, that is waiting to take that trade away from the American flag. And that is what you would do if you cut out this exception—that Alaska is not to be governed and controlled by foreign-owned shipping.

The word "Guggenheim" has been mentioned here. In the mind of some people the word "Guggenheim" is synonymous with the ownership of every dollar's worth of property in Alaska, and, my colleagues, it only bespeaks the absolute ignorance of a man when he makes any such statement as that. The Pacific Coast Steamship Co., the Alaska Steamship Co., the Seattle Steamship Co., the Humboldt Steamship Co. may have some Guggenheim money in them. I do not know, and I do not care. But my information, derived from a long residence in that community, is that the Guggenheims control none of these companies. The trade between Puget Sound and Alaska has been developed. They are satisfied with it. They are satisfied with the rates; if the rates are excessive, the Shipping Board has ample power to adjust them and establish them. Only here and there is a little steamer that comes within the provisions of the character of a steamer that the Shipping Board intends to commandeer for over-seas trade. I do not believe it is helpful to turn over that trade to the British flag, or to turn it over, my colleagues, to the Japanese flag. It should be kept under the American flag, where it is, where the little steamers ply up from Puget Sound, go up into that country, and bring down their products, including copper, if you please, from the Guggenheim mines—bring those products to an American city, to an American market. I will ask my colleagues if there is any more necessary article used in this war than copper from the Guggenheim mines? Also fish; all kinds of products of that kind.

Leave us alone, gentlemen, in the Alaskan trade. Let our little steamers supply that trade, and let the remnants of a coastwise trade under the American flag continue to flourish and continue to supply the Alaskan people. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, some question has been raised in the progress of this debate over the extent and powers of the Shipping Board. I wish to put into the RECORD precisely what these powers are. Section 18 of the shipping bill provides—

That every common carrier by water in interstate commerce shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, classifications, and tariffs, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, and bills of lading, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, transporting, storing, or delivering of property.

Every such carrier shall file with the board and keep open to public inspection, in the form and manner and within the time prescribed by the board, the maximum rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between points on its own route; and if a through route has been established, the maximum rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between points on its own route and points on the route of any other carrier by water.

No such carrier shall demand, charge, or collect a greater compensation for such transportation than the rates, fares, and charges filed in compliance with this section, except with the approval of the board and after 10 days' public notice in the form and manner prescribed by the board, stating the increase proposed to be made; but the board for good cause shown may waive such notice.

Whenever the board finds that any rate, fare, charge, classification, tariff, regulation, or practice, demanded, charged, collected, or observed by such carrier is unjust or unreasonable, it may determine, prescribe, and order enforced a just and reasonable maximum rate, fare, or charge, or a just and reasonable classification, tariff, regulation, or practice.

That covers the whole legal situation.

Mr. Speaker, if there is no other gentleman who desires time—

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. Under this bill is it not provided that no such vessels shall engage in the coastwise trade except upon a permit issued by the United States Shipping Board, which permit shall limit or define the scope of the trade and the time of such employment?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not that limitation just as satisfactory to the gentleman, and does not that give the board absolute control over the shipping?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think so. I think, so far as the power of the board is concerned, that it would undoubtedly be sufficient to control the situation without the proviso. But this proviso, I suppose, was added by those who voted for it out of abundance of caution, and to make it certain that vessels in the foreign trade would not be admitted to the coastwise trade in that area.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that every shipping interest can be protected by this board?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The power of the board would be ample to conserve the interests of the coastwise trade in Alaska against foreign intrusion, but the amendment covers the situation so completely that no exercise of discretion will be permitted to the board.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Then what is the use of giving the Shipping Board any power to regulate rates?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The board is not given the power to admit foreign ships to the coastwise trade in Alaska. The proviso provides that this particular power shall not be exercised by the board as to Alaska.

Mr. BOOHER. Why should they be given power to exercise it in every other part of the country, and not in Alaska?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, to answer that in detail, would be to go over the entire argument of the gentlemen who have preceded me. The gentlemen who have discussed this bill heretofore have covered that situation, and have given the reasons why, in their judgment, it is desirable that the proviso in the bill should remain. I have merely undertaken to put into the RECORD the law in relation to the powers of the Shipping Board, and have not discussed the reasons supporting the proviso. That has been fully done by other gentlemen.

Mr. BOOHER. My idea was to get the opinion of the gentleman who seems to be in charge of the bill—

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; I am not in charge of the bill at all.

Mr. BOOHER. As to why this exception is necessary.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], is in charge of the bill, and he will answer the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will permit, I will answer the gentleman. This is a war emergency measure. We undertook to make it apply only to those trades where the emergency exists, and there was no evidence before the committee that there is an emergency existing in the Alaskan trade demanding this legislation. Nobody appeared before the committee representing Alaskan interests insisting that Alaska should not be excluded from the provisions of the bill. The Delegate from Alaska and the contestant for his seat, Judge Wickersham, are both in Washington, and I assume that if there was any demand that this legislation should extend to Alaska one or both of those gentlemen would have appeared before the committee and made some statement to that effect.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I should like to supply the gentleman with information. Delegate SULZER, of Alaska, is out on the Pacific coast, as I understand it, called there by illness in his family.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I saw him here recently, and I supposed he was still in the city.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is my information.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill has been pending since early in August and the hearings were in the early part of this month. For that reason, when the Alaskan shipping interests represented and made a showing that seemed to justify it by Mr. Clark, the committee put this exception into the bill.

Mr. BOOHER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Did not the hearings also show that while there was no immediate need for extending this bill to Alaska now, it might in the near future be necessary?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; not that I recall. I want to say this: There are conditions in that trade of which I think I have had general knowledge for some time past and with which I am quite as familiar as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston], which I think will require treatment apart from any emergency measure like this. That was the view of the majority of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the gentleman, I would like to ask him as to a statement in the hearings.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to ask if this statement is not a part of the hearings:

Mr. HADLEY. It is certainly true at this time that there has been no necessity, so far as Alaska is concerned, shown for this legislation. There may be before we are through.

That was his statement.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not challenging his statement.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman said that there was no evidence that there is any shortage.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is not at this time, and that is what I said.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will bear in mind, I read some newspaper accounts of quite a shortage of facilities up there for shipping fish to market.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am talking about the statements before the committee. The newspaper accounts to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] refers has never been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. White], a member of the committee.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I want in the first instance to correct one statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], who spoke of himself as the junior member of the committee. I want to say I claim that distinction for myself.

With respect to this Alaskan situation, it seems to me it is a very simple proposition. As I understand it, you have there to-day American lines traversing from American Pacific ports to Alaskan ports. You have also in that trade to-day Canadian lines traveling from Canadian ports—Prince Rupert and others—to and from Alaskan ports. You have then competitive conditions, and in connection with that trade to-day you have competitive rates. Now, it appeared in the testimony before the committee that there were in Alaskan waters to-day a fleet of Canadian vessels with a speed, as I recall it, up to 21 knots. They are in these waters waiting like vultures to pounce on the American trade when once it is opened up to them. If that condition is permitted, you will have these Canadian ships in this trade. Then what will be your condition? You will have American ships driven from the Alaskan trade, as you have seen the American ships driven from every trade where they have come into competition with subsidized foreign ships. Then you will face a condition where instead of competitive conditions and competitive rates you will have noncompetitive conditions and noncompetitive rates, determined and fixed by hostile and foreign interests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is one of the considerations which led some members of this committee to stand for this exemption.

Now, speaking generally about this legislation, there are some of us, and I am one, who have come to the support of this bill with great reluctance and with the gravest misgivings. I have been brought up to believe in an American merchant marine. I want to see a merchant marine built in American yards, flying the American flag, commanded by American officers, and served by American seamen—a marine bound in loyalty and interest to America. [Applause.] I view, as I have said, with the greatest apprehension any modification of a policy which this country has followed for more than 100 years with most beneficent results. But we face unusual conditions, which we must meet as best we can. As an emergency measure I am obliged to support this bill. This bill has come out of this committee as a compromise of conflicting views, and I earnestly hope it will have the approval of the House without further modification. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to debate the amendment, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Johnson of Kentucky). The gentleman from Virginia moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HADLEY) there were—ayes 30, noes 40.

So the amendment was lost.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

SUSPENSION OF WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rule a conference report on Senate joint resolution 78, suspending during the present war with Germany the requirement that not less than a hundred dollars' worth of labor shall be performed, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. It is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, September 29, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting memorandum of the Chief of Ordnance on subject of defective ammunition, a certain amount of which was sent for supplying the United States expeditionary forces in Europe, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6180) to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks, and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 169), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2527) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 170), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STRONG: A bill (H. R. 6345) to authorize certain military officers to take affidavits, testimony, and acknowledgments of the execution of deeds, and other instruments of writing, of persons in the military service of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 6346) to aid our Government by producing foodstuffs and to aid farmers and give employment to the unemployed, and encourage agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SIEGEL: A bill (H. R. 6347) to amend the naturalization laws; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 6348) to provide a preliminary survey of the Kootenai River in Idaho, and its several forks and tributaries, together with drainage area, with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6349) to provide a preliminary survey of the St. Joe and St. Maries Rivers and Coeur d'Alene Lake and their several forks and tributaries in Idaho with a view to flood control; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 6350) to authorize the issuance of Reserve Corps and National Army commissions in the lower grades of Staff Corps and to remove the fixed age limits requiring the discharge of Reserve Corps officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EMERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 156) asking the President to set aside a day of prayer for the success of American arms; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 6351) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 6352) granting an increase of pension to Martha F. James; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 6353) for the relief of James Strachan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 6354) for the relief of Noah Cox; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOOD: A bill (H. R. 6355) granting a pension to Lillie I. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOSS: A bill (H. R. 6356) granting a pension to Robert Leigh Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 6357) granting a pension to Frances A. Griffith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURRY of California: A bill (H. R. 6358) granting a pension to J. F. P. Gentil; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRODBECK: A bill (H. R. 6359) granting an increase of pension to Jordan Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALMON: A bill (H. R. 6360) granting a pension to Mary Lee Jeter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Washington City and vicinity, protesting against the proposal to give tobacco to the soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Missouri, protesting against any further tax against the motion-picture business; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 29, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray for light upon the pathway of this new day, the light that will illumine every problem that comes before us and that will shine also in our hearts and minds. Give to us the knowledge of the glory of God. We pray Thee to guide us according to Thine own unerring counsel in all our deliberations and give us a constant consciousness of the Divine presence and leadership. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT (S. DOC. NO. 113).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Naval Establishment, for the service of the fiscal year 1918, amounting to $5,760,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5949) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SHERLEY, and Mr. GILLET managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 2816. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River; and

S. 2823. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5839. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 6175. An act giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2156. An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium;

S. 2705. An act to create the aircraft board and provide for its maintenance;

H. R. 4960. An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5431. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions from the Washburn Loyalty League, of Washburn, Wis.; from C. W. Cannon, of New York City; from W. A. Coombe, of Washington, D. C.; and from D. M. Jones, of Washington, D. C., praying for the expulsion from the United States Senate of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send to the desk a petition in the form of resolutions adopted by the Minnesota Commission of Public Safety for appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be noted in the Record and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Resolutions relative to the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] delivered before the nonpartisan convention in St. Paul on the 20th of September, 1917, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to present a memorial from certain citizens of Harford County, Md., which I ask to have printed in the Record. I do not desire to discuss the question to which this memorial refers, but I wish to say that I find myself in entire accord with the statements and sentiments contained therein, and that it has my unqualified indorsement.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Whereas it has become known through the press and otherwise that the United States Government is contemplating the purchase of the Bay Shore Tidewater section of Harford County for use as an artillery proving ground: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the canners, farmers, and residents of said section, in mass meeting assembled this 22d day of September, 1917, at Perryman, Md., do hereby register our vigorous protest against such action of the Government, and respectfully petition that the idea of using this section be abandoned for the following good and sufficient reasons, namely:

First. Hon. Herbert Hoover, food conservation commissioner, has continually and most wisely advised and urged a large increase of food production. The part of Harford County under consideration by the Government is one of the most fertile and productive sections in the country, being especially noted for its large yield of sugar corn and tomatoes, of which its numerous canneries pack hundreds of thousands of cases annually for domestic consumption and export. The taking over of this garden spot by the Government would destroy many valuable farms and timberlands, close canneries, and throw a large number of people out of employment. Many homes would be destroyed and thousands of residents forced to seek work elsewhere. Then, too, the valuable and extensive fisheries along the shores of the Chesapeake Bay and rivers would be disastrously affected, as this is the only spawning ground for shad and herring in this part of the country.

Second. In view of these facts, we can not believe that the administration would be willing to ruthlessly sacrifice so productive a territory in this time of great need of foodstuffs, when other sparsely settled and less productive localities are available, and could be secured with much less damage to the public welfare.

Third. The people of Harford County are patriotic and devoted to their country; they have given of their best sons to the Army and their daughters to the Red Cross; their purses have always been open to any of its needs, and they are willing to make all necessary sacrifices, but they are not willing to lose their homes and occupations unless the Government can not procure a suitable site elsewhere; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Gen. Crozier, Hon. Herbert Hoover, and the Representatives of our State in the United States Senate and House, and to the press.

HENRY H. BOYER, Chairman.
PARKER MITCHELL, Secretary.

THE SECOND LIBERTY LOAN (S. DOC. NO. 112).

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address delivered by Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, at the annual convention of the American Bankers' Association, at Atlantic City, September 28, 1917, on the subject of the second liberty loan, be printed in the Record. It is a very able address and will be of great service in promulgating the reasons for the second liberty loan.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that he also ask that it be printed as a document?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is of such overwhelming importance that I think it ought to be printed both in the Record and as a document. I asked that it be printed in the Record because the Record goes out immediately, and if printed as a document it would take a considerable length of time before it received circulation, and only then when addressed by some public official or Member of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to having it printed in the Record and also as a document, and I would amend the motion by having it printed as a document as well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The address is as follows:

THE SECOND LIBERTY LOAN.

"Gentlemen of the American Bankers' Association, it gives me great pleasure to meet the members of this association and to express to you in person my deep appreciation of the patriotic and cordial support the bankers of the United States have given to the Government in the important financial operations in which the Treasury has been engaged since the outbreak of the European war. They deserve high commendation also for the notable services they rendered and for the contributions they made to the Red Cross war fund. Nothing could be more creditable to the American people than their extraordinary generosity in providing this monumental fund for mercy.

"The credit of the Federal Government throughout its history has been maintained inviolate; its obligations have always been scrupulously observed; its engagements have always been honorably fulfilled. The national credit is the first bulwark of defense of the Nation's rights. If that credit be impaired, the whole economic and financial structure of the country is imperiled. Finance is so fundamental to war that the first duty of every nation upon the outbreak of hostilities is to conserve its financial resources and to make the national credit impregnable and sufficient for all the purposes of the war.

"In all of the great financial operations in which the Government has been engaged in the past, and in all of those in which it must engage in the future, the American banker must, because of his knowledge, experience, ability, and influence, become the first line of defense and offense. His thorough cooperation with the Government relieves the task, however stupendous, of any doubt. To you, the patriotic bankers of America, has come a great responsibility and a great opportunity—the responsibility of helping your Government solve its huge financial problems successfully, and the opportunity to serve your country in ways peculiarly useful and effective at this time.

"It is perhaps important that the reasons why we are at war with Germany should be restated as often as possible. There are some noisy agitators and disloyal writers in this country who have persistently endeavored to confuse the issue and to carry on a seditious and subtle propaganda for the purpose of producing discontent among the people and of giving aid and encouragement to the enemies of the United States. A large part of this propaganda was undoubtedly financed by the German Government directly, from the outbreak of the European war, August, 1914, until America entered the war, April 6, 1917. Much of this same propaganda has probably been carried forward since America entered the war by German money left in the United States for that purpose by Von Bernstorff, the adroit and malevolent German ambassador, before he was dismissed. With that money and with money provided by German sympathizers and certain disloyal elements in the United States the propaganda has continued, but in a modified form. It would be difficult to ascertain exactly how much money has been expended for this purpose, but some of the recent disclosures by the State Department indicate how active were Germany's own representatives while in this country. It is well for the American people to realize the hypocrisy and disloyalty of all these efforts, and to determine to stamp them out relentlessly and remorselessly, because the interests of the Nation must at no time be imperiled more by the traitors within our walls than by the enemies without.

"It has been repeatedly stated that America entered this war to make liberty and democracy secure throughout the world. While that is true, it must always be remembered that America entered the war for a more immediate reason. Noble and idealistic as is her championship of universal democracy, she entered this war primarily because of the persistent insults and aggressions of Germany, the wanton disregard of American rights within our own borders as well as upon the high seas, the contemptuous violation of international law, and the ruthless destruction of American life and property.

"Before this war broke out every civilized nation accepted and honored the rule that in time of war a merchant vessel, neutral or belligerent, should not be sunk by an enemy war vessel unless the lives of the passengers and crew were first made safe. Under this long-observed law an American citizen had the right to travel upon a British or a French merchant ship with the full knowledge that that ship would not be sunk by a German war vessel until the passengers and crew were taken from the ship and their safety secured. Civilized warfare has always respected the lives of noncombatants.

"If a German regiment should capture a French town or city, and, while marching through the streets, should fire upon a crowd of unarmed and helpless men, women, and children, killing a great number of them, crippling and wounding others, the whole world would gasp with horror; and yet this would be far less inhuman than to sink a ship at sea containing non-combatant men, women, and children, because on land those who are wounded may be rescued, taken to the hospitals and saved, while many who are not hit by bullets may actually escape. The reason the rule of the sea has always been rigidly enforced by every civilized nation is that if you sink an unarmed ship without giving the noncombatants a chance to escape they are thrown into the water and all must perish. There is no chance for the wounded or the uninjured to escape. The remorseless sea engulfs them all and obliterates life 'without a trace.' What, therefore, would be a crime of the first order in the killing of noncombatants on land, is a crime of colossal and inexcusable proportions when it is committed upon the high seas.

"Yet this is exactly what Germany has done consistently since the outbreak of the war. She has destroyed merchant vessels on the high seas without warning, killing noncombatant men, women, and children without mercy and in the most brutal and ruthless fashion, in defiance of all international law and every accepted rule of humanity and civilization.

"The rights of Americans upon the high seas have been wantonly disregarded. It is not an answer to say that Americans should not have sailed on merchant ships bearing the British or the French flag. They had a right to sail on those vessels, and were compelled to sail on them because there were not enough merchant ships under the American flag to furnish transportation for American business men, American consular and diplomatic officers, and others engaged in peaceful and rightful pursuits to go upon their legitimate errands. They were forced to sail under foreign flags and were entitled to the protection accorded by universally accepted international law and the mandates of civilization and humanity, viz, that the ships would not be sunk by an enemy vessel until the safety of passengers and crew was first assured.

"On September 1, 1915, the German Government gave the following assurance to the United States:

"Liners will not be sunk by submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance.

"This promise was promptly violated. On October 15, six weeks thereafter, the British steamship Arabic was sunk and three American lives were lost. The German Government said to the United States:

"The Imperial German Government regrets and disavows the act and has notified Commander Schneider accordingly.

"Scarcely had this assurance been received before the Italian steamer Ancona was torpedoed without warning, and seven American lives were destroyed. On the 29th of November, 1915, the American vessel William P. Frye was sunk in violation of international law. Following that, attacks were made upon several American vessels in gross violation of these promises, and on December 30 the British liner Persia was sunk in the Mediterranean without warning, and more than 300 passengers and members of the crew were lost, among them being an American consul traveling to his post. This American consul was obliged to sail on this British vessel, because there was no American vessel upon which he could travel. He was entitled to protection under international law, as well as under the repeated assurances of the German Government.

"On January 7, 1916, the German Government again assured the United States that German submarines in the Mediterranean would not sink enemy merchant vessels, except in accordance with the general principles of international law, and 'only after passengers and crews had been accorded safety.' On February 16, 1916, the German Government said to the United States:

"Germany has limited her submarine warfare because of her longstanding friendship with the United States, and because by the sinking of the Lusitania, which caused the death of citizens of the United States, the German retaliation affected neutrals, which was not the intention, as retaliation should be confined to enemy subjects.

"The German Government promptly proceeded to disregard these assurances, sinking numerous ships without warning, including a number of American citizens, and imperiling the lives of many more. Whereupon the American Government notified the German Government on the 18th of April, 1916, two months thereafter, that—"If it is still the purpose of the Imperial German Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines, without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

"Whereupon the German Government, on the 4th of May, 1916, about two weeks thereafter, gave definite assurances to this Government that new orders had been issued to German naval officers 'in accordance with the general principles of visit and search in the destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law.'

"Again, and in spite of these repeated assurances, the German Government proceeded to sink merchant vessels without warning and without securing the safety of the lives of passengers and crew. One American was killed on the British steamer Cabosha on October 20, 1916; 8 Americans were killed on the British steamer Marina, October 28, 1916; 17 Americans were killed on the British steamship Russia, December 14, 1916.

"On January 31, 1917, the German Government gave this notice, to take effect the following day:

"Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England, from and to France, etc. All ships met within that zone will be sunk.

"Whereupon the United States on February 3, three days afterwards, severed diplomatic relations with the German Government in the following statement:

"In view of this declaration which withdraws suddenly and without prior intimation the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of May 4, 1916, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honor of the United States but to take the course which it explicitly announced in its note of April 18, 1916, that it would take in the event that the Imperial Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare then employed and to which the Imperial Government now purposes again to resort.

"All diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire were thereupon severed, the American ambassador at Berlin was immediately withdrawn, and the German ambassador, Von Bernstorff, was given his passports.

"Between February 3 and April 1, 1917, almost two months, 1 American was killed on the British steamship Eavston, 10 Americans were killed on the British steamer Vedamore, 1 American was killed on the British steamship Torino, 1 American was killed on the French steamer Athas, 8 Americans were killed on the British steamship Laconia, 1 American was killed on the Norwegian steamship Sjostad, 5 Americans were killed on the American steamship Vigilancia, 7 Americans were killed on the American steamship Healdton, and 19 Americans were killed or missing from the British steamship Crispin. Besides this, seven American steamships were sunk by German submarines in these two months, but no Americans, except 5 on the Vigilancia, were killed.

"Moreover, the British steamer Yarrowdale was captured by a German auxiliary cruiser prior to our entry into the war, and 72 American citizens were taken as prisoners of war by Germany, which was a clear violation of American rights. They were maltreated and abused and subsequently released.

"The crowning act of infamy in Germany's ruthless policy, however—and I mention it last, although it was the first in occurrence—was the sinking, on May 7, 1915, of the British steamship Lusitania, an unarmed passenger vessel, and the killing of 114 American citizens—men, women, and children.

"Each and every American life and each and every American vessel destroyed by Germany during these two years was an act of war upon the American people, the consequences of which were avoided from time to time by the plausible assurances and excuses of the German Government, each and every one of which was perfidiously and insincerely made, and each and every one of which was deliberately disregarded.

"But this is not all. Germany, while professing friendship for America, and while her ambassador, her representatives, and her citizens were enjoying our hospitality and receiving our protection, was plotting against the domestic security of the United States by blowing up munitions plants, fomenting strikes and disturbances in the labor world, disseminating false information and poisoning the minds of the American people against their own Government, plotting its downfall, and seeking to influence our Congress, as evidenced by Von Bernstorff's dispatch of January 22, 1917, to the Berlin foreign office, in which he said: 'I request authority to pay up to $50,000 in order, as on former occasions, to influence Congress through the organization you know of, which can perhaps prevent war.' And while Von Bernstorff was busy upon our own shores with intrigue through his spy system and through the corrupt use of money to influence public opinion and the national policies of the American people, Zimmermann, the foreign secretary in Berlin, had sent a dispatch to Mexico urging her to make war upon the United States and begging Mexico to invite Japan to join her in this dastardly work, promising Mexico that California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas would be restored to Mexico in the event of success. What more perfidious conduct could have characterized the government of any nation with which we were at peace? What must be the judgment upon a government capable of such infamies? And yet there are those who undertake to defend Germany and to say that the American people did not have sufficient grounds upon which to enter this war!

"The outrages committed upon American rights through the persistent destruction of American life and property during the years 1915, 1916, and 1917 were provocation enough, but when the German Government undertook by its edict of January 31, 1917, to mark off hundreds of miles of the high seas surrounding Great Britain, France, and Italy, and to declare that it would sink on sight every American vessel which entered these prohibited waters, although in pursuance of lawful commerce and of international right, and actually proceeded to carry out the threat, there was nothing left for America to do but to fight or else submit to this tyrannical and monstrous edict of the German military despot.

"We chose to fight—and why? Because, first, national honor and self-respect imperatively demanded it, and, second, because we can never concede the right of any nation, however powerful, to order American vessels and American citizens to keep off the high seas and prevent America from selling her surplus products of the farm, the factory, and the mine to other nations of the world.

"If we had tamely submitted to that order, it would have brought disaster and ruin to the American people. Not only would it have been a mortal blow to their honor, self-respect, and standing as a nation but it would have brought irreparable injury, loss, and suffering to our people. If any foreign nation in this war could with impunity order vessels of the United States to keep off of any portion of the high seas, which are the common property of all the nations of the earth, and if we had submitted, we would have established a fateful precedent. In a future war some other nation might conclude that American vessels carrying American citizens and American commerce should be ordered off of some other portion of the high seas, and we would be obliged to submit or to fight under all of the disadvantages of having yielded in the first instance. If we had been submissive, it would not be an illogical next step for the nation which ordered us off of 500 miles of the Atlantic Ocean to order us to keep off the entire Atlantic Ocean except that part within 3 miles from our own shores, over which we have acknowledged jurisdiction. We could never submit to such a destruction of our vital rights.

"On the material side the disaster of submission is most striking. The Kaiser's order forbade our ships from carrying our people and our commerce to Great Britain, France, and Italy. Our prosperity and our welfare as a people are inseparably connected with our right of free and unmolested intercourse with those nations. In the fiscal year 1917 our total exports to Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Italy were $3,457,000,000, in round numbers; in 1916 they were $2,247,000,000, in round numbers. Our exports to those countries constitute more than one-half of our export trade with the entire world. These exports represent the surplus products of our farms, of our mines, of our factories. If we are denied a market for them, these farm products would rot or go to waste upon our own soil, the production of our mines and factories would be greatly reduced, labor would be thrown out of employment, stagnation of industry would result, and suffering and want would stalk in the land. Our production always has exceeded the home demand, and if we are denied foreign markets and attempt to sell the whole of our products at home, the result would be demoralized prices, with returns far below the cost of production, and consequent injury to every man, woman, and child in America. No one more than our farmers, the grain growers, and the cotton growers particularly, would be so injured by obedience to the Kaiser's order. While our export trade would be destroyed, our import trade would disappear. Certain imports are essential to our national life and existence. We must have them, and we can never submit to any tyrant who forbids us to sail the high seas in the peaceful pursuit of our legitimate interests and in the unmolested enjoyment of the rights we won by the blood and courage of our ancestors.

"If we had yielded to this insolent order signed by the Kaiser in his palace in Berlin, he would have destroyed by one stroke of his pen more than $3,400,000,000 of our commerce, and American vessels and American citizens would have been excluded from all intercourse with the great and friendly nations of Great Britain, France, and Italy. By one stroke of the Kaiser's pen he would have accomplished more destruction on our farms, in our factories, and in our mines than he could achieve with all the armies and navies of the German Empire. It is a monstrous edict, and it would be a monstrous thing for America to submit to it.

"And so we had to fight for our rights, and so it is that we engaged in a righteous war—a war which we intend to bring to a successful issue by the organized might of this Nation. We intend to match organization against organization, science against science, American skill against German skill, American valor against German valor, and I have not the shadow of a doubt that the victory will be complete, that America's honor will be vindicated, that America's vital rights will be preserved, that peace upon a stable and just basis will be reestablished, and that democratic institutions will be extended throughout the earth.

"When war comes to a nation the first essential is money. We must keep our soldiers and sailors armed and equipped with the best that money can buy and American skill devise. We must constantly provide them with necessary clothing and food; we must pay their wages; we must, as a humane and just Nation, support their dependent families while they are risking and giving their very lives for us; we must supply them with a reasonable amount of life insurance. We destroy their insurability and conscript almost the whole of their earning power when we draft them and send them to the front. We can do no less than reconstitute their destroyed insurability and their diminished earning power. We must increase, strengthen, and maintain our Navy; we must provide a predominant fleet of aeroplanes and air fighters; we must build a great merchant fleet, so that our long line of communication with our gallant soldiers in France may be maintained and our commerce carried across the high seas in defiance of the German Kaiser and his submarines; we must succor our noble compatriots in arms—the British, the French, the Italians, the Belgians, and the Russians—by lending them money with which they can buy arms and food and other supplies in our markets. All these things must be done and done quickly. It is upon the Treasury of the United States that every demand in time of war focuses, because everything goes back to the gold pile. The problem of the American Treasury is the problem of the American banker and the problem of the American people; it is the problem of keeping the Treasury supplied with the means to carry forward these great objects under the direction of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, your President, whose glorious stand for America's honor and America's rights, for justice, civilization, and democracy have made him one of the greatest of the world's outstanding figures.

"The problem is twofold: To supply essential credits to the allied Governments, because it is vital to the cause that their strength and credit shall be sustained; and, secondly, to meet our own requirements.

"Roughly speaking, and after allowing for the amount of revenue to be raised by taxation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, we shall have to raise by additional bond issues between thirteen and fourteen billions of dollars. It is estimated that $5,000,000,000 will represent additional loans to the allied Governments, which, in turn, will give us their obligations bearing interest. This $5,000,000,000 will not, therefore, represent expenditures; it will represent loans based upon the good faith and honor of these foreign Governments—loans which will ultimately be repaid to the American people. But as we must finance these loans, they are an integral part of our general financial operations. To raise thirteen to fourteen billions of dollars on or before the 30th of June, 1918, by the sale of bonds in recurring installments seems to some people an impossible task. It is a stupendous undertaking, but it is not impossible for America. It is not easy, but it can be done. Our resources are adequate; our will is perfect; our spirit is indomitable; and our success is certain. We have only to pull together—bankers, lawyers, doctors, manufacturers, farmers, wage earners, laborers, men and women alike, Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts, and every other class of our people—and we can do the job. Already we have demonstrated what a united people can do when partisanship is subordinated to patriotism; when love of country becomes supreme. I look forward, therefore, with confidence to the success of the recurring campaigns we must make for the sale of liberty bonds, and I am comforted by the reflection that the Government has the solid and unswerving support of the patriotic men who compose the American Bankers' Association.

"The new bonds bear 4 per cent interest and are exempt from all State, municipal, and local taxation, except estate and inheritance taxes, and all Federal taxes except superincome taxes, excess-profits taxes, and inheritance taxes. They are convertible into another issue of bonds, if authorized by the Congress, bearing a higher rate of interest than 4 per cent. I shall not enter into the details, because Treasury circulars and regulations will explain them fully. I do desire, however, to advert briefly to the taxation feature of these bonds.

"The first liberty bonds bore 3½ per cent interest and were exempt also from supertaxes. These bonds did not make the widest appeal. To be successful with recurring issues of liberty bonds it is necessary that they should appeal to the masses of the people. In order to give the exemption from supertaxes on the first liberty bonds it was necessary to make the rate of interest correspondingly low. The returns show that of the 4,000,000 subscribers to the first liberty loan 3,960,000 subscribed in amounts of $10,000 and less. The aggregate of such subscriptions was approximately $1,300,000,000, or 62½ per cent of the first offering. To most of these subscribers exemption from the supertaxes was of no value, or in any case of little value, whereas to the 40,000 subscribers who bought large blocks of liberty bonds the exemption from the supertaxes gave an undue advantage. In order that they might have this advantage, the small holder was obliged to receive a lower rate of interest. It was estimated that under the pending House bill the exemption from supertaxes would make a 3½ per cent liberty bond in the hands of a man with a large income equivalent to a taxable bond bearing 9½ per cent interest per annum for that part of his income in excess of $2,000,000. The inequality of this plan is obvious. It sets at naught the principle now firmly grounded in our national policy that graduated taxes shall be laid upon wealth in order that the burden of taxation may be equitably distributed and made to bear more heavily upon the rich than upon the poor. No one now challenges the correctness of this principle. It is, therefore, essential that Government bonds should be issued upon a basis which will be equally just to the poor man and the rich man, so that each may purchase these bonds upon practically the same interest basis after allowing for the different scales of taxation. The present law accomplishes that object.

"It should be borne in mind, moreover, that if the Government should continue to exempt from supertaxes bonds issued during this war, the time would come when there would be created in this country a class of people of great wealth, enjoying great incomes wholly free from tax burden. A grave risk would be involved in such a policy. It would be fraught with great danger to the State and would be well calculated to produce discontent with tax burdens falling thus heavily on the many to the exclusion of the few.

"For the purpose of illustration, let us suppose that the war continues so long that $20,000,000,000 of bonds, bearing 4 per cent interest, should be outstanding, and that they were exempt from all taxation, including supertaxation. The interest charge on these bonds would be $800,000,000 per annum, almost as much as the entire expenses of the Government at the outbreak of this war. Let us suppose that half, or $400,000,000, represented the exemption from supertaxes which was accorded to people of great wealth. Bear in mind that I am taking arbitrary figures merely for the purpose of illustration. This $400,000,000 would have to be raised by taxation upon the masses of the people; in other words, they would have to be taxed directly in order that the $400,000,000 of tax exemption accorded to the people of great wealth who bought the liberty bonds should be able to get them on better terms than the poor man who bought them. This is manifestly unfair, because, although the total exemption affects more or less the price for which the bonds may be sold for the United States, yet no adequate return can be had for it. We can not sell bonds in billions on the basis of what they may be worth to the very rich. They must be offered to all the people alike at one price, and should appeal to all alike and upon equal terms. The result of selling a bond which bears a low rate of interest and carries exemption from graduated and superincome taxes will be this: The poor and the people of modest means will buy them for patriotic reasons, but will be unable to hold them, because the return is too small. It will be less than they can get from banks of deposit or savings banks, and the tendency will be all the time for these bonds to be purchased from them and accumulated by the very rich without any adequate consideration moving from them either to the United States or to the original subscriber. In these circumstances the value of the tax exemption depends not upon the bonds themselves but upon a wholly extraneous fact, the extent of the wealth of the holder.

"Much might be said for subjecting the bonds to normal income taxes as well as to supertaxes. Practical considerations, however, make such a discussion academic. If the bonds were not exempt from normal taxes, it would probably be necessary to offer a higher rate of interest than 4 per cent. To do that would involve too sudden an adjustment in the markets for other securities to be healthy. It is important that the United States, in becoming a great borrower of money, should adjust the terms of issues in such a way as to avoid, as far as practicable, any break in the general market for securities. It is apparent that the reasons I have given, which are controlling against exemption from supertaxes, apply, if at all, only to a very limited extent to exemption from stamp taxes and normal income taxes. These taxes are levied upon all wealth at a level rate, and the exemption carries approximately equal value to every bondholder, rich and poor alike. There is a very natural feeling that the holder of a United States bond ought not to be harassed by little taxes and returns incidental to its ownership. The United States ought to be able to get full value for exemption from such normal and stamp taxes in the price and interest rate at which it will be able to sell its bonds. The bonds will, of course, continue to be exempt from all State and local taxes throughout the United States.

"If a subsequent series of bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum should be issued by the United States before the end of the war, then the holders of these bonds will have the privilege, at their option, at any time within six months after such issue is made, of converting their bonds at par into bonds bearing the higher rate of interest at the price, not less than par, at which the bonds bearing interest at the higher rate shall be offered for subscription to the public. Of course bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent can not be issued without further legislation by Congress, and, if such an issue should be authorized, not only the interest rate but also the general character of the bonds will be determined by Congress or by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority of an act of Congress; and the holders of the 4 per cent bonds will be entitled, if they wish to do so, to receive bonds of the character so determined, except that the bonds issued to them, if they exercise the privilege of conversion, will have the same date of maturity, the same interest dates, and the same date for redemption before maturity as the 4 per cent bonds now offered. If this new conversion right arises it must be exercised within the period prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury or it will come to an end. The object of this privilege of conversion is to place the investor in 4 per cent liberty bonds in a position of substantial equality with the purchaser of bonds of the next issue at a higher rate, if any be made—not to give him a position of superiority from which he might pick and choose between various bargains which from time to time might be offered by the United States during the course of the war. If the new bonds into which conversion is made carry also a conversion privilege then that privilege may be exercised with respect to a subsequent issue at the holder's option.

"These provisions for conversion are substantially determined by the act of Congress recently approved by the President, and under which the bonds are offered for subscription. Of course this act of Congress does not affect in any way the rights of the holders of the 3½ per cent liberty bonds of the first issue. Their rights were fixed by the previous act, and by the terms of the circular offering these bonds for subscription, and by the terms of the bonds themselves. They may convert their bonds into new 4 per cent bonds just like those now being offered for subscription, except that the bonds issued upon such conversion will have the same maturity of principal and interest and redemption date as the old  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds, or they may keep their  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds if they prefer.

"The old law under which the  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent liberty bonds are issued differs in one respect from the new law under which the 4 per cent bonds are issued. The holders of the  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds, while they must exercise the privilege of conversion into the 4 per cent bonds within the period of six months beginning November 15, if they desire to exercise it at all, would have the right, if subsequently bonds should be issued at a still higher rate, say,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, again for a period of six months beginning at the date of the issue of those bonds, to convert their bonds into  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds, even though they had not made an intermediate conversion into the 4 per cent bonds. This arrangement, resulting from the language of the old law, seemed to Congress and to the Treasury Department to be rather more than fair to the old bondholders and to carry with it burdens of administration and difficulties in connection with the future financing of the United States which ought not to be repeated.

"It has been urged upon me that many men of wealth will refuse to buy the 4 per cent bond with liability to superincome taxation. I should be loath to believe this; but if it is true, the position of the Government must always be to offer a bond upon terms fair and equitable to all alike and which will make the widest possible appeal to all the people without regard to the extraneous fact that a man may be poor or rich. The Government can not finance this war by making an appeal alone to the rich, nor to the man of moderate means, nor to the poor. Its appeal must be to all the people, and all the people must respond to that appeal and by united effort sustain the Government in these great credit operations. It has been suggested to me that patriotism should play no part in the sale of Government bonds. I do not concede this, although I believe that the American people will buy these 4 per cent Government bonds on their merits. Patriotism is, first, love of country above everything—above life itself; second, love of country combined with that vital interest in the Nation's welfare and safety which will make secure the material interests of each individual and promote his happiness and prosperity.

"If this is true, the man of wealth, with patriotism or with modified patriotism or without patriotism, has a greater stake in the security of Government than any other class, because if the Government's credit is destroyed and disaster comes upon the country, as it inevitably will if the Government's credit fails, what is property worth to the rich man, what is life worth to the free man? By buying Government bonds the rich man obtains the safest investment in the world and, at the same time, by helping to sustain the national credit, promotes the national safety and makes property secure.

"But upon the merits of the investment the man of wealth secures in a Government bond, subject even to the supertaxes, an investment of matchless character. His principal is safe beyond peradventure. Neither storm nor stress can shake it. Its market value is the same in every State in the Union; it is exempt from taxation in every State in the Union and not, as in the case of State, municipal, or local bonds, only in the State of issue; it pays an adequate return; it is convertible into another bond bearing a higher rate of interest during the war with Germany. What could be more liberal to the investor? I know of no instance where a bond has been issued by a State, or any political subdivision thereof in the United States, or by any private corporation, which gave to the investor the opportunity of converting that bond into a subsequent issue of bonds at a higher rate of interest. There may be, but I am not aware of it.

"The question naturally presents itself as to how these great operations of the Government are to be financed. They can be financed only through the united support of all the people of the United States. The kind of support I mean is that every individual, every partnership, every corporation, shall invest not only their available means from time to time in Government bonds, but that they shall make sacrifices of comfort and convenience; that they shall economize; that they shall avoid waste; that they shall save in every possible direction in order that they may increase their available resources for the purpose of assisting the Government in these prodigious operations upon which the national security absolutely depends. We must encourage thrift and industry throughout the land, and we must make everybody understand that the first duty of the hour at this critical time is to place all their available resources at the disposal of the Government.

"Fortunately the resources of America were never so ample for ourselves and so formidable for our enemies as now. The combined resources of the National and State banks (including trust companies) of the United States are now $37,000,000,000. At the outbreak of the Civil War the combined resources of the banks were estimated to be $1,500,000,000, and yet with these limited banking resources the Union Government raised $3,000,000,000 by bond sales, or twice the amount of the banking resources of the country. Upon the same basis we should now be able to raise $74,000,000,000 through Government loans. I am not suggesting that this may be done; I am only drawing a comparison.

"There has been much speculation as to what are the annual savings in the United States, as to whether or not they are large enough to meet the demands of the Government in this war, and as to how much will be left after the needs of the Government are satisfied. I have myself been greatly confused by the many conflicting estimates and theoretical observations with which I have been favored. Recently there was placed in my hands a most interesting and illuminating paper on this subject by Col. M. W. Thompson, now in charge of the Finance Division of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, and a member of the firm of Thompson & Black, financial accountants, of New York. The argument and the figures arrayed in this statement are impressive. I quote two paragraphs from this statement:

"Careful investigation of the present available supply of capital suggests the conclusion that the present needs of the Government may be adequately met, and that the entrance of the Government into the market as a competitor for capital need not prevent necessary expansion. The needs of the country must be and will be first served, but there will be sufficient capital left for industrial purposes. Patriotic response to the needs of the country need not force bankers into a policy of retrenchment. These conclusions are striking. Indeed, they are at variance with the general attitude of financiers, but they are soundly based upon accurate statistical information.

"In a normal year savings from all sources in the United States—from corporations, business men, farmers, and investors generally—amount to from $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. In 1916 the supply of capital in the United States was about two and a half times the normal amount. In that year savings in this country, including those re-invested by corporations in their own enterprises, amounted to $15,000,000,000. Conservative estimates for the current year indicate that the aggregate for 1917 available for the use of the Government in prosecuting the war and for the general purposes of financing industry may reach $18,000,000,000.

"I have not had opportunity yet to study the elaborate tables and the argument which have been submitted to me in support of these conclusions, but I have examined them sufficiently to convince me that they are worthy of deep study. I am greatly indebted to Col. Thompson and to his firm, Messrs. Thompson & Black, for the service they have rendered in making such a careful analysis and for the privilege they have given me of making use of it. I hope to be able to publish Col. Thompson's statement in the near future.

"Whatever differences of view there may be about the annual savings of the American people, it is undoubtedly true that they are so large that with the other resources of the country upon which we may draw, there can be no doubt whatever of the ability of the people of the United States to finance every demand which the Government may make upon them for the purposes of this war. If the ordinary savings which have been made heretofore voluntarily are now augmented by the savings which can be effected under the pressure of patriotism and necessity, by prevention of waste, the practice of genuine economy, the cutting off of luxuries during the period of this war, what may not the American people be able to do? Already the country is aroused to the importance of the situation, and there is a spirit of determination and cooperation throughout the land which augurs well for the success of every financial undertaking of the Government and for the continued maintenance of our industrial and commercial situation unharmed and unimpeded by the essential financial operations of the Government. This sounds at variance with what I am going to say subsequently about the necessity of cutting off of unnecessary capital expenditures during the war, but it is not. That action is none the less desirable, because, as a matter of prudence and of wisdom, we should conserve the resources of the Nation in every possible direction.

"In the matter of savings, which are of such prime importance, the Treasury purposes to issue in the near future and to sell to the people war savings certificates in as small denominations as $5, maturing in five years, and upon such a reasonable plan that the humblest person in the land may be encouraged to save all that he can and to invest in an absolutely safe security bearing interest, while at the same time doing his part to sustain the Government and help win the war. I have appointed a war savings committee to take charge, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of this important branch of the work. This committee consists of Messrs. Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman; Frederick A. Delano, of the Federal Reserve Board; Henry Ford, of Detroit; Charles L. Baine, of Boston; Mrs. Elizabeth Bass, of Chicago; Eugene Meyer, of New York. It will not be possible to offer the war savings certificates during the forthcoming liberty loan campaign, but as quickly as possible these certificates will be made available for the people of the country through the post offices, internal-revenue offices, customs offices, the banks, and other agencies that may be designated by the Government.

"The value of this campaign for war savings certificates is not alone in the amount of money that may be saved, but in teaching the people of the United States on a nation-wide scale and through an intelligent presentation of the facts the value of thrift and saving. Its beneficial effects ought to survive the war and have a permanent effect upon the future economy of the country.

"Upon the bankers rest a peculiar duty and responsibility at this time. They can render inestimable service, not alone in promoting savings but also in exercising a wise discrimination as to loans involving new capital expenditures and in discouraging every unnecessary undertaking involving fixed investments until after the close of this war. We must realize, my fellow countrymen, that the gravity of the situation for the Nation and for the entire world is so impressive that the Government must preempt and occupy exclusively, if necessary, until this war is over the entire investment field in the United States.

"It should be the first duty of every citizen to invest gladly his available means in Government bonds, and it should be the duty of the patriotic governors of our States, the mayors of our cities, and the controlling authorities in every political subdivision of the country to discontinue unnecessary public works and improvements until this war is over. Private enterprise should be governed by the same principle. I do not mean to have you infer that this is a definite suggestion that an immediate attempt be made upon any organized scale to discourage unnecessary capital expenditures; but I do wish to urge that you, the bankers of America, make a deep study of this question, so that if the time comes when it is desirable to take action you will be prepared to cooperate quickly with the Government.

"It should be remembered that the National Government has no power, through legislation, to regulate or control capital expenditures of States, municipalities, or political subdivisions of States, nor has it the power to legislate with regard to such investments by private corporations, except those engaged in interstate commerce. Through the cooperation of the States effective measures could in time be concerted, no doubt, to meet this question if the necessity arises. But that would take time. In the absence of State action it is possible, however, for the bankers of the country to discourage, to a very great extent, unnecessary or unwise investment of capital in private and public enterprises during the period of this war. I hope that this association will appoint a committee to study this problem and to be prepared to act as the public interest may require.

"It is also a matter of great importance that the bankers of America shall conserve their own resources, having always in mind the supreme necessities of the State, so that they may be able, as the first bulwark of the Government's credit, to respond quickly and effectively to any calls the Government may make upon them. In this connection it is most important, gentlemen, that interest rates should be kept at a reasonable level throughout the country, that sufficient expansion of credit should be had to carry on the great commercial and industrial operations of the Nation and to assist in the flotation of successive issues of Government bonds.

"I should like to impress upon you the importance of a prompt and widespread response on the part of the bankers of the United States to the offerings of short-time Treasury certificates which will be made from time to time. These certificates, as you know, have maturities of from 30 days to 4 months, and are sold in anticipation of bond offerings and the payment of taxes. Through their use, the necessities of the Government during the interval between recurring bond issues are met, and the process of financing these bond issues is not only eased but simplified. Undue strain upon the credit resources of the country is avoided because payments are spread over a period and adjusted in such a way as to prevent disturbance and inconvenience. The banks can render highly valuable and patriotic service to the Government by purchasing promptly, and to the extent required, these Treasury certificates as offered.

"We are fortunate in having the Federal Reserve System, whose usefulness is now becoming increasingly manifest. This system is demonstrating every day its tremendous importance and value to the banks and to the American people. It not only gives strength and security to our financial structure, but it offers the essential means of legitimate credit expansion and flexible note issues, for which the country has so long stood in dire need. This system has already won the approval of the bankers and people of the United States. I wish that the State banks would realize the great opportunity they now have of promoting their own interests by joining the Federal Reserve System, and by doing so to make that great system more impregnable for their interest and the common interest of the country. It would consolidate the financial strength of the Nation in such a way that the operations of the Government in this war could not be put in question. It is a commanding duty of self-interest and patriotic service to the country.

"The next offering of the liberty loan has just been announced. The amount is $3,000,000,000, with the right reserved to allot 50 per cent of the oversubscription. I should like you to understand, gentlemen, that in the determination of the amount of these offerings I am controlled by inexorable facts. These facts are the actual necessities of your Government. I do not determine these questions arbitrarily. We are face to face with a situation where the needs of the Government must be met. When I announce the amount of an offering of liberty bonds, please remember that it is the minimum with which the Government's business can be carried on and the war effectually conducted. I should feel happier if the loan were larger, but I have endeavored to make it as small as possible in order that the least possible strain may be put upon the country's resources during the crop-moving season.

"We must make this loan a success. We can make it a success. The failure of a single issue of Government bonds would be worse for America than a disaster upon the field of battle. We must never let that happen.

"A few days ago I read the following manifesto issued in Berlin by the League of German Municipalities:

"If money talks, the President of the United States may learn by October 18, when the subscription lists close, that the echo of the new war fund given by the German people will have drowned out completely the clamor of unending protests to which his reply to the Pope have given stimulus.

"Let us meet that challenge by a subscription to our second liberty loan on the 27th day of October, nine days after the close of the German loan, which will make clear to the German military depotism that America marshals not alone her brave soldiers upon the field, her invincible Navy upon the high seas, her industries throughout the length and breadth of this land, but as well her financial resources, and that she is determined to use them all without stint and regardless of sacrifice to vindicate American rights, outraged too frequently by German infamies. Let us answer this challenge by making clear to the world that the American people, with transcendent love of justice and of country, stand solidly behind their great President and support unequivocally the purposes of this war.

"Fellow countrymen, we are at one of those great points in the progress of civilization where pregnant issues for the whole human race are to be determined. It is an inspiring thought that noble, free, peaceful, and liberty-loving America has been called by God to powerfully influence, if not to determine, the course of future events. We have a grave responsibility, and I know that we shall discharge it worthily of American patriotism and American idealism. These problems are of unparalleled novelty and magnitude. The means of determining action must frequently be more instinctive than logical. We are traversing unknown and uncharted seas. Our compass must be the steadfast cooperation of the best wisdom and intelligence of the country, inspired by a lofty patriotism which neither obstacles can discourage nor death defeat. America's sacred rights must be vindicated; a just and lasting peace must be established; democracy must be triumphant; despotism must be destroyed; and, when these great things have been accomplished, everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world men shall proclaim noble America as the valiant knight who came upon the scene in the blackness of the night and rescued civilization!"

FARM-LOAN BOARD.

Mr. POMERENE, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2921) to amend the act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositories and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

PROTECTION OF MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES.

Mr. WEEKS. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report a bill and ask for its immediate consideration.

The bill (S. 2932) to guard the military and naval forces from physical and moral injuries of commercialized prostitution was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to keep or assist in keeping a place of prostitution to which any person known to be a member of the military or naval forces of the United States is admitted or to admit any such member to such place, or to knowingly rent or in any manner allow the use of any place for acts of prostitution with any member of such military or naval forces. No person shall solicit or seek to induce any person known to be a member of such military or naval forces to enter any place of prostitution or to consort or cohabit with any prostitute. Knowledge that a person is a member of the military or naval forces of the United States may be prima facie established by proof showing that the accused had knowledge that at the time or recently before the commission of the offense the person alleged to be a member of such military or naval forces was wearing the uniform or a part of the uniform of such military or naval forces. Whoever shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person who has been convicted of disorderly conduct, delinquency, soliciting for prostitution, or any other sexual offense, without having first obtained permission from the proper military authorities, to loiter in or around a military camp, fort, navy yard, or place of training or mobilization. Any such person present in or around such camp, fort, navy yard, or place of training or mobilization, without authorization or military permission, may be ordered to depart by the civil or military authorities having jurisdiction therein. Any person failing to depart when so requested shall be guilty of disorderly conduct and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment of not more than 60 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMER G. PAQUET.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2719) to permit the reenlistment of Omer G. Paquet in the United States Army, and I submit a report (No. 138) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the reenlistment in the United States Army, at the grade held by him at the time of his dishonorable discharge from the service, of Omer Germain Paquet, formerly a quartermaster sergeant; and the said Omer Germain Paquet shall, for the purposes of computing continuous service, for ascertaining the rate at which he shall be paid, and for retirement, be considered to have served continuously from the date of his last enlistment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes." I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. Chaplains: The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army at the rate of not to exceed, including chaplains now in the service, one for each 1,200 officers and men in all branches of the Military Establishment, with rank, pay, and allowances as now authorized by law: Provided, That there shall be assigned at least one chaplain for each regiment of Cavalry, Infantry, Field Artillery, and Engineers."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIRCULATING NOTES BY NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2922) to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 3, 1864, Revised Statutes, section 5175, which prohibits national banks from being furnished with notes of less denomination than $5, be, and it is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That that part of the act of March 14, 1900, which provides "that no national banking association shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, or to issue or reissue, or place in circulation more than one-third in amount of its circulating notes of the denomination of $5," be, and it is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act any national banking association, upon compliance with the provisions of law applicable thereto, shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, or to issue or reissue, or place in circulation notes in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100 in such proportion as to each of said denominations as the bank may elect: Provided, however, That no bank shall receive or have in circulation at any one time more than $25,000 in notes of the denominations of $1 and $2.

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 2933) for the relief of the Philippine Scouts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 2934) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Herman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 2935) granting an increase of pension to Nathan C. Kelly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 2936) granting an increase of pension to Wade H. Pyle; to the Committee on Pensions.

MANUFACTURE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer a concurrent resolution and ask for its present consideration. It is to correct a typographical error in a bill that has already passed both Houses.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 13) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to insert, after the word "explosives," in the first proviso of section 5 of the bill as agreed to in conference, the words "are not subject to the provisions of this act."

BRITISH LABOR'S WAR MESSAGE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 139) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 84, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, British labor's war message to American labor, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is that document?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a document entitled "British labor's war message to American labor: Addresses and discussion at a meeting of the committee on labor of the Council of National Defense, held in Washington on May 15, 1917." It has been printed as a document, but 5,000 additional copies are desired, and I think the request is a very reasonable one. It is a matter of very great interest, and the document possesses peculiar educational value. I believe it would be advantageous to allow the printing of this number of copies for distribution.

Mr. SMOOT. Is this a report from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it is my own resolution. I have not had time to consult the committee. The document has just been completed and printed. It has just been issued, and this request comes from people who are very much interested in the subject, particularly from the vice president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers. They would like to distribute it to their lodges, and they have about that number of lodges. The membership, of course, is a very great deal more. This is a very important document, containing the addresses by the members of the committee that came over here, and I think it is very well worth while to print this additional number of copies so as to allow that distribution.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is agreed to.

ADDRESS BY OTTO H. KAHN.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD a brief address by Mr. Otto H. Kahn, of New York, relative to citizens of the United States of German origin or descent.

Mr. Kahn is a German himself, naturalized in the United States, and consequently in a position to speak freely on that subject, and his address is exceedingly useful and sensible. It seems as though it ought not to be necessary to publish propaganda setting out the duty of citizens of the United States to give their allegiance to the country in which they live and in which they are naturalized; but on account of the attitude of a few of this class of our citizens who seem to imagine that they can live in the United States and draw their sustenance from it and at the same time give their allegiance to a power with which the United States is at war, a great injury has been done to the loyal German-American citizens of the country.

This address by one of their number, which is an intelligent analysis of the changes which have come over the spirit of Germany in recent years, so different from the old Germany with which we were all familiar, and the opportunities which have been given to the subjects of that country in this great land, I think ought to be given publicity.

In that connection I also ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a brief letter from the Pro-American Society, a society composed largely of German-American citizens organized for the purpose—which ought not to be necessary, but is—of inculcating patriotism among the citizens of the United States of German blood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star, Sept. 26, 1917.]

SAYS THE GERMANS HAVE BEEN MISLED—OTTO H. KAHN TALKS OF THE PROFOUND CUNNING EMPLOYED BY GOVERNING CLASS—PLEA TO FOLLOW PATRIOTS.

HARRISBURG, PA., September 26.

Speaking to-day before the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce, Otto H. Kahn, of the banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., said, in part, in discussing the proper attitude of German-Americans toward their adopted country:

"I speak as one who has seen the spirit of the Prussian governing class at work from close by, having at its disposal and using to the full practically every agency for molding the public mind.

"I have watched it proceed with relentless persistency and profound cunning to instill into the Nation the demoniacal obsession of power worship and world dominion, to modify and pervert the mentality, indeed, the very fiber and moral substance, of the German people—a people which, until misled, corrupted, and systematically poisoned by the Prussian ruling caste, was, and deserved to be, an honored, valued, and welcome member of the family of nations.

"I have hated and loathed that spirit ever since it came within my ken many years ago; hated it all the more as I saw it ruthlessly pulling down a thing which was dear to me, the old Germany to which I was linked by ties of blood, by fond memories and cherished sentiments.

"The difference in the degree of guilt as between the German people and their Prussian or Prussianized rulers and leaders for the monstrous crime of this war and the atrocious barbarism of its conduct is the difference between the man who, acting under the influence of a poisonous drug, runs amuck in mad frenzy and the unspeakable malefactor who administered that drug, well knowing and fully intending the ghastly consequences which were bound to follow.

WORLD LONGS FOR PEACE.

"The world fervently longs for peace. But there can be no peace answering to the true meaning of the word, no peace permitting the nations of the earth, great and small, to walk unarmed and unafraid, until the teaching and the leadership of the apostles of an outlaw creed shall have become discredited and hateful in the sight of the German people; until that people shall have awakened to a consciousness of the unfathomable guilt of those whom they have followed into calamity and shame; until a mood of penitence and of a decent respect for the opinions of mankind shall have supplanted the sway of what President Wilson has so trenchantly termed 'truculence and treachery.'

"God grant that the German people may before long work out their own salvation and find the only road which will give to the world an early peace and lead Germany back into the family of nations, from which it is now an outcast.

"From each of my visits to Germany for 25 years I came away more appalled by the sinister transmutation Prussianism had wrought among the people and by the portentous menace I recognized in it for the entire world.

"It had given to Germany unparalleled prosperity, beneficent and advanced social legislation, and not a few other things of value, but it had taken in payment the soul of the race. It had made a 'devil's bargain.'

BRUTAL MIGHT VERSUS HUMANITY.

"And when this war broke out in Europe I knew that the issue had been joined between the powers of brutal might and insensate ambition on the one side and the forces of humanity and liberty on the other—between darkness and light.

"Many there were at that time—and among them men for whose character I had high respect and whose motives were beyond any possible suspicion—who saw their own and America's duty in strict neutrality, mentally and actually, but personally I believed from the beginning of the war, whether we liked all the elements of the allies combination or not—and I certainly did not like the Russia of the Czars—that the cause of the allies was America's cause.

"I believed that this was no ordinary war between peoples for a question of national interest or even national honor, but a conflict between fundamental principles and ideas; and, so believing, I was bound to feel that the natural lines of race, blood, and kinship could not be the determining lines for one's attitude and alignment, but that each man, whatever his origin, had to decide according to his judgment and conscience on which side was the right and on which was the wrong, and take his stand accordingly, whatever the wrench and anguish of the decision. And thus I took my stand three years ago.

ONLY ONE COURSE LEFT.

"But whatever one's views and feelings, whatever the country of one's birth or kin, only one course was left for all those claiming the privilege of American citizenship when by action of the President and Congress the cause and the fight of the allies was formally made our cause and our fight.

"The duty of loyal allegiance and faithful service to his country, even unto death, rests, of course, upon every American.

"But if it be possible to speak of a comparative degree concerning what is the highest, as it is the most elementary, attribute of citizenship, that duty may almost be said to rest with an even more solemn and compelling obligation upon Americans of foreign origin than upon native Americans.

"For we Americans of foreign antecedents are here not by the accidental right of birth, but by our own free choice, for better or for worse.

"We are your fellow citizens because you accepted our oath of allegiance as given in good faith, and because you have opened to us in generous trust the portals of American opportunity and freedom and have admitted us to membership in the family of Americans, giving us equal rights in the great inheritance which has been created by the blood and the toil of your ancestors, asking nothing from us in return but decent citizenship and adherence to those ideals and principles which are symbolized by the glorious flag of America.

WOE TO THE BETRAYER.

"Woe to the foreign-born American who betrays the splendid trust which you have reposed in him!

"Woe to him who considers his American citizenship merely as a convenient garment to be worn in fair weather, but to be exchanged for another one in time of storm and stress!

"Woe to the German-American, so called, who in this sacred war for a cause as high as any for which ever people took up arms does not feel a solemn urge, does not show an eager determination to be in the very forefront of the struggle, does not prove a patriotic jealousy, in thought, in action, and in speech, to rival and to outdo his native-born fellow citizen in devotion and in willing sacrifice for the country of his choice and adoption and sworn allegiance and of their common affection and pride.

MAKES FERVENT PLEA.

"As Washington led Americans of British blood to fight against Great Britain, as Lincoln called upon Americans of the North to fight their very brothers of the South, so Americans of German descent are now summoned to join in our country's righteous struggle against a people of their own blood, which, under the evil spell of a dreadful obsession, and, Heaven knows, through no fault of ours, has made itself the enemy of this peace-loving Nation, as it is the enemy of peace and right and freedom throughout the world.

"To gain America's independence, to defeat oppression and tyranny, was indeed to gain a great cause.

"To preserve the Union, to eradicate slavery was perhaps a greater still.

"To defend the very foundations of liberty and humanity, the very ground work of fair dealing between nations, the very basis of peaceable living together among the peoples of the earth against the fierce and brutal onslaught of ruthless, lawless, faithless might; to spend the lives and the fortunes of this generation so that our descendants may be freed from the dreadful calamity of war and the fear of war, so that the energies and millions and billions of treasure now devoted to plans and instruments of destruction may be given henceforth to fruitful works of peace and progress and to the betterment of the conditions of the people—that is the highest cause for which any people ever unsheathed its sword.

CONDEMNS MAN WHO SHIRKS.

"He who shirks the full measure of his duty and allegiance in that noblest of causes, be he German-American, Irish-American, or any other hyphenated American, be he I. W. W. or socialist or whatever the appellation, does not deserve to stand among Americans, or, indeed, among free men anywhere.

"He who, secretly or overtly, tries to thwart the declared will and aim of the Nation in this holy war is a traitor, and a traitor's fate should be his."

PRO-AMERICAN SOCIETY,

New York City, N. Y., September 29, 1917.

HON. MILES POINDEXTER,

The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. George Henry Payne has spoken so often to members of this society about you that I am taking the liberty of writing to tell you that this society has been formed for the purpose of working against the German-printed papers as long as they do not print in English during the war. We are all of German descent, and we believe that a burden is especially placed on us by saying, though we have Teutonic blood we are "first and always Americans."

I will be very grateful to you for an expression of opinion as to this society and the work it is trying to do.

I write this letter with Mr. Payne's consent.

Respectfully, yours,

HARRY A. SCHENDEL, Secretary.

THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House of Representatives concurrent resolution No. 13. I wish before submitting the request to state to the Senate that for two or three months, on account of the extreme press of business upon members of the Committee on Printing, I have been unable to obtain a quorum of the committee at any time, although the meetings have been called weekly for several months. I have had letters and private statements from Members of the House of Representatives in which they express themselves as being exceedingly anxious to have this speech printed as a public document. I ask unanimous consent, in view of its being a House resolution and Members of the House being deeply interested, that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the consideration of the resolution, as I judge I should do from the large correspondence I have about it, and I shall make a request for its immediate consideration at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator state what the resolution is about?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is about printing a speech on the flag. The resolution passed the House unanimously.

Mr. FLETCHER. The speech of Mr. Hicks?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The speech of Mr. Hicks.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator know what the cost will be?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The cost was the reason of the objection. We had a quorum at one time and passed it over. My understanding was that I was to see whether or not there was any great demand for it on the part of the House of Representatives. I have been in the last week spoken to more than a dozen times on the subject. It will cost something over $5,000 to print it. I will state in this connection that the Committee on Printing have refused to report favorably for the printing of over a million dollars' worth in response to requests that have been made for printing at this session, and we have held ourselves as closely to the line as the economies of the present occasion would suggest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I do not care to object to the consideration of the resolution at this time, but I do deem it my duty to say to the Senate that it calls for more than $5,000, as the Senator from Arizona has said, and the committee, when we had a quorum together, thought that we ought not to favorably report the measure. As has been well said by the chairman, the Committee on Printing has been almost overwhelmed with requests for the printing of public documents, and we have felt, in view of the immense appropriations we were making, that we ought to stop and consider any proposal to pay $5,000 or more to print somebody's speech.

I received a letter from the author of the speech this morning asking me to favor the printing of it as a public document. I wrote him that we had felt we ought not to approve, and I had felt myself that I ought not to approve, any measure calling for the expenditure of this amount of money without a hearing, without consideration, and without a quorum being present, especially in view of the fact that at one time we had a quorum present and after some considerable consideration we declined to report the resolution favorably.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me, as the Senator knows, and I take very great pleasure in informing the Senate, there have always been two members present at the meetings of the Committee on Printing, one of them the honorable Senator from Vermont, who has just spoken, and the other the chairman of the committee. The purpose of this resolution is, I understand, largely educational. I spoke of the letters I get on the subject. I received probably 50 this morning and yesterday from different Members of the House. I have not attempted to take the least snap judgment, because I am explaining to the Senate the exact conditions that lead me to make this request of the Senate. I understand from all these letters it is for the purpose of distribution largely among the school children in the congressional districts of the speech at this time when the patriotism of our country needs all the encouragement it can possibly have. It is not the mere speech of Mr. Hicks; it is a history of the development of the present flag, and it will make an extremely interesting document. It is not for the purpose of printing as a public document a mere statement of a Member of either House, but on account of the collective information which it gives it would be very well for the school children of the country to have it, and it should be placed in the libraries for distribution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why does it cost so much?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Because it is an illustrated pamphlet.

Mr. OVERMAN. With pictures?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. With a picture of the flag, developing the history of the flag.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the committee was opposed to printing this document?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The committee took no vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the motion of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator from Arizona asks that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and he asks unanimous consent for its present consideration at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. PAGE. I believe I have the floor, but I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state, in connection with what the Senator from Arizona has said that the matter was laid before the committee, and the committee postponed action until the chairman could investigate as to the necessity and also as to the cost of printing the document. After that the matter went along from time to time and the committee had difficulty in getting a quorum. The only motion which I think is in order will be to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution. The resolution is before the committee. I have no objection to discharging the committee from its further consideration.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I certainly shall not object to the motion of the Senator from Arizona but I feel that the Senate should know that this matter has been before the committee time after time, and in every case, whether we had a quorum or not, we have passed it over, not because it might not be a worthy resolution but because, in these times, the Committee on Printing do not feel that we ought to appropriate $5,000 unless there is necessity for it, and the committee have on each occasion thought it unwise to report favorably the resolution. With that statement, I simply have advised the Senate as to the condition of affairs, as I understand them; and there I am willing to leave the matter.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I hope the motion of the Senator from Arizona will prevail. The document which the Senator is seeking to have printed contains a history of the American flag and is very educational; it was read in the House of Representatives by Representative Hicks, of New York. I am receiving letters from all over the country asking for a copy of the document, and I believe at this time its printing would serve a very good purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Printing from the further consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona whether or not the committee has made a final decision that this document shall not be printed?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No, sir; there never has been any such decision by the committee. I stated to the Senate before the Senator from Utah entered the Chamber that at one meeting when there was a quorum present the resolution had been called up but was passed over, with the understanding that I should see the Members who were in favor of the proposition in the other House, and make an effort, if possible, to avoid the printing of the document, for the Senate committee did not feel, on the mere presentation of the matter, that we ought to spend that much money for that purpose. Since that time, as I have already explained to the Senate, I have received communications from different Members of the other House, and I have had a personal interview with more Members in regard to this particular matter than in regard to any matter that has been before the committee in my experience.

Therefore, as I have also explained, because of the absence of Senators who composed the committee, occasioned by their duties on other important committees, I have never been able to secure the attendance upon the committee of any Senator, except the Senator who has just addressed the Senate and myself, from the time I last saw the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] there. It apparently being impossible to secure a meeting of a quorum of the committee, I have taken this occasion to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and to ask unanimous consent that it be put on its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator from Arizona will not do that, for I know of no committee of the Senate, when ordinary conditions are existing, the members of which attend the meetings more assiduously than do the members of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the Senator will concur in my statement that it has been physically impossible for me to attend the meetings of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have already attempted to explain to the Senate that it has been impossible for members of the committee to be present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been in attendance on the meetings of a committee where we have been compelled to be present from early morning till late at night; but those meetings will be over in a day or two, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall then be delighted to attend the meetings of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, I will withdraw my motion, with the notice that I shall call a meeting of the Committee on Printing for next Wednesday morning, if that will be satisfactory; and I ask that the members of the committee be present, so that we may dispose not only of this matter but of another matter of much more importance.

THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in regard to the message from the President which was laid before the Senate a moment ago, consisting of estimates for appropriations for the Navy, I observed that the Chair referred the message to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs present, but I want to take this opportunity to call attention to the situation in regard to military and naval appropriations.

My opinion is that matters involving original undertakings by the Navy Department ought to have the investigation of the special committee of the Senate which has been constituted for that purpose. I was present the other day when some $600,000,000 or thereabout was appropriated for naval purposes, and I listened to the debate. Items of thirty, forty, seventy-five or two hundred and twenty-five million dollars were contained in the bill. Questions were asked of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the need for such vast amounts, and the only information which the Senate received from the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill in regard to any of those appropriations, to the best of my knowledge, was that they had been asked for by the department.

There is nobody more desirous of affording to the Navy Department all of the money that is necessary for the very fullest development of that arm of the national defense than am I; but I am not in favor of abdicating the legislative functions of this branch of the Government, and considering as the ultimate analysis of these problems a report or a request from the department that they want these vast sums. There ought to be some investigation by Congress as to what these appropriations are for, whether they are needed, and whether or not, in a legislative sense, such appropriations are wise and justified. The proper committee to investigate such matters, to obtain information which may be presented concerning them, to report to the Senate, and to advise the Senate in regard to them is the Naval Committee. I say that especially because of the attitude disclosed the other day in the consideration of the vast appropriations referred to, no information was furnished nor even any opinion expressed as to the need or propriety of them. I remember in connection with one item the chairman of the committee, in answer to an inquiry as to what the appropriation was for, seemed to think that he absolutely foreclosed any further inquiry in regard to the matter by saying with a great deal of emphasis that not only had the Secretary asked for these appropriations, but he held up a letter and stated that the Secretary had asked for the legislation to be in the identical words carried by the bill. I want Congress to go a little further than that and to know a little more about these matters. I wish to protest against this system of dealing with naval matters and insist upon investigation by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington, I will say that deficiency bills originate in the House of Representatives. The question came up recently as to whether there should be four or five different bills to supply deficiencies, or whether there should be one bill handled by the Appropriations Committee. Under the rules of the House, as I understand, after the regular appropriations have been made, all deficiency appropriations are referred to the Appropriations Committee. It would have been utterly impossible to have one portion of the great deficiency bill recently passed referred to the Naval Committee, another portion of the same bill to the Committee on Appropriations, and other portions to other committees.

I am frank to say that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, had no desire—and I talked the matter over with him—to infringe in any way on the prerogatives of the Committee on Naval Affairs in respect to naval appropriations. However, the House had decided that after the passage of the regular military and naval appropriation bills, which were enacted before the declaration of war came, deficiency items for the military and naval service should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations as deficiencies under the rules of the House. Possibly one-fourth or one-fifth of the items in the bill were new matters, which, strictly speaking, perhaps were not deficiencies, but on the whole it was determined better for one committee to handle the entire measure than to have four or five committees do that work and to have it divided up so that it would be impossible to coordinate the appropriations.

As I have said, all such bills in the other House are considered by the Committee on Appropriations as deficiencies. I listened to the hearings and read the testimony before the committee, and it seems to me that both the Committee on Appropriations of the House and the committee of the Senate investigated these matters. They had before them the chiefs of various bureaus and naval authorities to explain the reason for the proposed legislation.

I repeat, it would have been utterly impossible to have taken the portions of the bill that were new—and nine-tenths of the items were deficiencies under items contained in our regular appropriation bills which were passed before the declaration of war—and have had them considered by various committees. When we meet here at the regular session of Congress and these matters come up, I am satisfied appropriations for the Army and Navy will be handled by the Military and Naval Committees of the House and Senate, respectively.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Virginia justifying the surrendering by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs of their duties in regard to these appropriations is just as applicable to the ordinary regular general military and naval appropriation bills as it is to the deficiency bill which has been passed. There is not any difference whatever in the nature of the investigations to be made. The bills which the Senator calls urgent deficiency appropriation bills carry much larger amounts, several times over, than the ordinary general appropriation bills. The attitude which the Senator apparently takes in regard to the matter is the same attitude that I attempted to describe of his colleague from Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee—a sort of a passive frame of mind, to take things as they are presented. Because the House of Representatives decided to incorporate all of these appropriations in one bill, he says the Senate ought to do it. Of course the Senate can do it, but there is no substantial reason any more than there is as to every other appropriation bill that is considered here why the deficiencies in these bills relating to naval matters and the deficiencies that relate to military matters could not be referred, respectively, to the committees constituted for the disposition of those particular subjects.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, under the rules of the House, and possibly of the Senate, after a general appropriation bill has passed, deficiencies occurring are generally included in what is known as a general deficiency bill. Under the rules of the House all items included in a general deficiency bill go to the Appropriations Committee. When such a bill is passed by the House it comes to the Senate, and the question is, Whether that bill shall be referred to the Naval Committee, the Military Committee, or the Appropriations Committee? If the naval items and the military items had been separated from the other matters in the bill, then the naval items could have been referred to the Naval Committee; but, as I have said, under the rules of the House, and as decided, as I understand, after the declaration of war, deficiencies that supplement the general appropriation bill must be included in a general deficiency bill. Consequently, the Naval Committee of the House let them go to the Appropriations Committee of that body, and there was no other way to handle them in the Senate.

I will say for the senior Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that he has shown no disposition to encroach on the prerogatives of the Naval Committee, and has evinced no desire to do so. I discussed the matter with him early. I think he would have been very glad to have been relieved from some of the onerous work which he has been called upon to perform in connection with the bill in question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no doubt of that; I am not charging the senior Senator from Virginia with attempting to extend unduly the prerogatives of the Appropriations Committee; I am talking about a condition, and I am not commenting upon what was done in the House of Representatives. I do not know anything about that and have nothing to do with that; but as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and of the Senate, I have something to do with the performance of my duties here. The Senate does not have to be controlled by what was done in the other House, and there is no parliamentary or practical difficulty in having these matters considered by the proper committees which are supposed to be—whether they are or not—especially qualified for dealing with the respective matters with which they are accustomed to deal.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, general appropriation bills uniformly originate in the other House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. SWANSON. I have never known a general deficiency bill containing naval and military items, or otherwise, that did not originate in the House of Representatives. When such bills come here they must be disposed of. Now, does the Senator think that a general deficiency bill including items for all branches of the Government service and covering the Army to a greater extent than it does the Navy should have been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator has asked me that question for what purpose I do not know, because I have just said that the matters relating to the War Department ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SWANSON. Then the Senator—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know just as well as the Senator does, if he will pardon me, that general appropriation bills originate in the House of Representatives. It is not necessary for the Senator from Virginia to say that.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment and then I will yield to the Senator. I want to answer what he has already said. I am familiar with the practice of referring to the Appropriations Committee military and naval matters that come up in the usual deficiency appropriation bills, but this is not that situation at all. These vast appropriations are not in any proper sense deficiency appropriations.

Mr. SWANSON. Nine-tenths of them are deficiencies. I will explain to the Senator why they are.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am as familiar with them as the Senator is. They are extraordinary appropriations. That is what they are.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, take the pay of the Navy. We did not appropriate enough money for war conditions. Take the supplies. We did not appropriate to meet the present extraordinary conditions, so the appropriations had to be increased. Take the various items contained in the naval bill. With the exception of five or six items, which were new matters, nine-tenths of them, or more, were simply supplementing what we had theretofore appropriated, the amounts not having been sufficient for the purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, Mr. President—

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me further—

Mr. POINDEXTER. In a moment I will yield further to the Senator. Does the Senator know how much was appropriated for naval purposes in the so-called deficiency bill that passed here the other day?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How much?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not tell the exact items. I went over the items. I can not aggregate them. I know the sum was a very large one. It was more than the regular bill has been appropriating.

Mr. POINDEXTER. More than the regular bill. Now, does the Senator mean to say that the Naval Affairs Committee were so mistaken about the amount of money that would be required for the matters for which they were appropriating money that they missed it by more than 100 per cent? Why, of course not.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I will answer him. We appropriated for a personnel of 87,000 men in the Navy. Now the personnel is up to 200,000, on account of the war that has been declared since the general appropriation bill was passed. That increased it more than 100 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that increased it more than 100 per cent.

Mr. SWANSON. As a result the supplies required to feed those men had to be doubled, the pay had to be doubled, and everything that appertained to the subject. The ammunition had to be doubled and trebled and quadrupled. Consequently, if you go through the entire bill you will find that nine-tenths of it was to supply deficiencies occasioned on account of the declaration of war, which increased the amounts required.

Now, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him a question. You can not divide up a bill and refer it to three committees. A bill, Number so-and-so, from the House must go to one committee or another. We would not have any bill to consider in the Naval Affairs Committee unless we took the entire measure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator asks how we can proceed with this bill, and states what he seems to think is an insuperable difficulty. There is no difficulty about that at all. It is always easy to state difficulties if you do not want to do a thing, and it is generally very easy to overcome them if you have a mind to overcome them.

There is no reason why this bill could not be referred to three committees. There are plenty of copies of the bill. The bill can be referred to the Naval Affairs Committee and the Military Affairs Committee and the Appropriations Committee, with instructions as to what portions of the bill each committee shall deal with. Time and time again I have seen recommendations of the President of the United States submitted to the House of Representatives, recommending appropriations for different purposes and legislation for different purposes, and that message was referred probably to half a dozen different committees. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce to deal with the recommendations relative to interstate commerce and to the Committee on Naval Affairs to deal with matters pertaining to the Navy.

Furthermore, the matter that is before the Senate now is not a bill at all. It did not originate in the House of Representatives. As I understand, it is a message from the President, in which he forwards certain recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, and it does not relate to anything else, at least so far as the statement was concerned. It does not have to be referred to more than one committee. It ought to be referred to the committee that is constituted to deal with that subject, which is the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Just one word in regard to the other statement, and then I am through with the subject. The junior Senator from Virginia said that these appropriations were nine-tenths deficiency appropriations. The Senator is entirely mistaken in regard to that. It would be a sad commentary upon the intelligence of Congress if we had to come in here a few weeks after having passed a general appropriation bill and find out that we had to appropriate that much money over again to make up the mistakes in the amount appropriated in the original bill. Of course, Congress was not guilty of any such mistake. These are not deficiency appropriations. The Senator from Virginia says we appropriated for 87,000 men in the Navy. Well, that is all the men there were in the Navy at the time that appropriation was made. Now there are 150,000 men in the Navy, and it is necessary to make appropriations for those additional men. The bill contained one item of $225,000,000 for additional torpedo-boat destroyers—not a deficiency on previous authorizations but an entirely new increase of the Navy. So as to $45,000,000 for new Aviation Services and most of the other items for the Naval Establishment. They are not deficiency appropriations, but for new and additional developments. It is just as much an original matter as the appropriations contained in the general bills that were disposed of at the last session of Congress.

FOOD CONTROL AND DEMOCRACY.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present an article appearing in the Atlantic Monthly of August, 1917, entitled "Food control and democracy," by Mr. David Lubin, the American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, which I should like to have printed as a Senate Document. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On September 25, 1917:

S. 2830. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

On September 27, 1917:

S. 2477. An act to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5949) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair. The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 5839. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 6175. An act giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am a little apprehensive that later on in the day there may be difficulty in keeping a quorum and we may be forced to adjourn before important action is taken on executive matters. With the idea of resuming legislative business as soon as a brief executive session is had, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. RANDELL. If there is no further morning business, I should like to address the Senate briefly on the use of waterways, a war necessity.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. RANDELL. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator about how much time he expects to occupy? On the adjournment the other day we had under consideration a measure which it ought not to take a great while to dispose of, and I am extremely anxious to get it up for consideration to-day.

Mr. RANDELL. I will say to the Senator that if I am not interrupted I can present what I have to say in about 40 minutes, not more. I shall ask to have several tables inserted in the RECORD. The tables I have here are not to be read and there will be no objection to putting them in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish, if it is possible—

Mr. RANDELL. I can not yield, I will say to the Senator. I am perfectly willing to yield when I finish the speech, but I have the floor now and I should like to go on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

THE USE OF WATERWAYS A WAR NECESSITY.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, when the rivers and harbors bill was under consideration the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] occupied the time of the Senate for some days in opposition thereto. His views did not prevail, as the bill was passed by a large majority.

It is interesting to note, in passing, the steadily decreasing effect of his opposition. In 1914 the bill was defeated, a lump-sum appropriation of $20,000,000 being substituted therefor. The same thing happened in 1915, but the lump sum was increased to $25,000,000. In 1916 a bill was passed in regular form, but by the close vote of 35 to 32, while the bill of 1917 passed the Senate by the decisive vote of 50 to 11.

In spite of this overwhelming defeat at the hands of his colleagues the Senator from Iowa is continuing his fight against the improvement of the waterways of the United States through the columns of the newspapers. I hold in my hand a copy of the magazine section of the New York Times of Sunday, September 2, 1917, in which there appears an article under the heading "Lean days for the 'pork barrel.'" This article, which is published in the form of an interview with the Senator from Iowa, contains a number of statements which are so totally at variance with the facts that it can not be allowed to pass without reply.

One of the most extraordinary and inexcusable misstatements in the article refers to the Santee, Wateree, and Congaree Rivers in South Carolina, and this is made not only once but twice over.

In one place he says, "The first appropriation for improving this system of rivers dates back, it will be noted, to 1881. Since that time over $1,000,000 has been expended on these streams, and this year of the war $670,044 was asked and obtained." Turning to paragraph 6 on page 5 of the official print of the river and harbor act approved August 8, 1917, we find it reads as follows:

Santee, Wateree, and Congaree Rivers, S. C.: For maintenance, including the Estherville-Minim Creek Canal and the Congaree River as far up as the Gervais Street Bridge, Columbia, and for improvement of the Congaree River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 702, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $80,000.

A big difference between $80,000 and $670,000.

Of course, Mr. President, no one would ever believe for an instant that the Senator from Iowa would knowingly and intentionally make a statement that is untrue. But the Senator should remember that statements which are mistakenly untrue are just as misleading and do just as much damage as those that are intentionally untrue, and should take the time needed to make sure of the facts before he reaches and announces his conclusions. Unfortunately, the distinguished Senator from Iowa, with all his ability and industry, sometimes fails to follow this course.

However, the mistake in stating the amount of the appropriation is of less importance than the fact that, at a time when the railroads are severely taxed to handle existing traffic and when it is entirely probable that increased demands will arise for freight-carrying facilities, due to the necessity of moving greater crops and of supplying the numerous cantonments, it is proposed deliberately to reduce appropriations for our waterways and that the appropriation for the Santee and Congaree happens to be one of those specifically criticized. The Santee and the Congaree are essentially a single stream about 200 miles in length. Columbia, S. C., the capital and second city of the State and a manufacturing center of some consequence, is at the upper end, and the ocean port of Georgetown, S. C., is at the mouth, with intracoastal connection with Charleston. Columbia is the site of Camp Jackson, an Army cantonment where approximately 40,000 men will be concentrated.

At present the use of the water route, ocean and river combined, results in rates 15 to 30 per cent. lower than the rail rates, evidently a considerable advantage for Columbia and its tributary country, but due to the existence of some obstructive sand bars, navigation is interfered with at low stages of the river and as a consequence the dependability of the boat service is impaired for a short period of time each year. This is a serious detriment to the community concerned, as it naturally diminishes the use of the river. With part of the recent appropriation of $80,000 it is proposed to alleviate these conditions and this will lend encouragement to the people of Columbia who are planning to improve the river service by the construction of new barges and towboats, leading in turn to a larger use of the river for the ordinary commercial purposes.

In addition there will for some time to come be a large increase in the quantity of freight coming to Columbia, due to the requirements of Camp Jackson, and to supply this camp the river route should prove of great value. Independent testimony as to its value is given by Gen. Leonard Wood, who, as long ago as the beginning of August, reported to the War Department that the service given by the railroads in the Southeastern (Military) Department was very slow, and recommended the use of water routes for supplying the camps and cantonments then about to be established. He noticed particularly the Santee-Congaree route to Columbia and advocated its use.

How much traffic the establishment of Camp Jackson will add to the water route is, of course, uncertain; but on every ton carried by water the United States will save in freight between $1 and $2, and it is safe to assert that no very great length of time will be required to show a considerable profit on the amount this year invested in the waterway.

In further illustration of the economic value of waterways I desire, Mr. President, to include in my remarks a brief table prepared by Capt. A. A. Poland, who is now in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, and who was for some years traffic manager of the Kansas City Missouri River Navigation Co. This table shows, in a most striking manner, the effect of water competition on railway rates. It is worthy of careful study, but I will only call attention to the comparison of fourth-class rates between Cincinnati and Evansville, which is on the Ohio River, and Gallatin, Tenn., a point in the interior. Where there is water competition the rate is 17.9 cents and where there is none the rate is 52 cents.

I ask permission to insert as a part of my remarks the table which I have prepared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

EFFECT OF WATER COMPETITION ON RAILWAY RATES.

All-rail class rates between river points compared with all-rail class rates from river points to interior points.

(Compiled by Capt. A. A. Poland, Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, formerly traffic manager Kansas City Missouri River Navigation Co.)

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, it is very evident that the rail rates are made with the purpose of underbidding the waterways on such traffic as might seek to use them. While certain rail rates are kept abnormally low and the railroads thus retain a large part of the traffic to which they apply, this is an undesirable and unfair arrangement, compensated, as is well known and as is shown in part by the table, by means of much higher rates to interior points.

At a time when transportation difficulties are great and are increasing, the statesmanlike policy would be not to restrict nor diminish the usefulness of our waterways, but to devise methods for promoting their greater use. Capital is proverbially timid and naturally hesitates to engage in new or doubtful enterprises. Transportation on our inland waterways, if properly organized, financed, and equipped, can undoubtedly be conducted at less cost than on the railways, but adequate organization, capital, equipment, and management will be forthcoming only if the waterways are kept in good condition, assurances as to the permanence of such policy given the interested public, and, as now seems to be necessary, assistance of some practical kind given in the establishment of experimental lines for the purpose of demonstrating the most efficient way to use these waterways.

Some further adjustment of the railroad-rate situation may also be necessary so as to permit the water carriers to use the railroads to advantage in through business to inland points. At present the rail carriers deny to the river lines the same division of rates that they give to their rail connections, whereas, to overcome the inertia and the disinclination of the business community to engage in a new departure, the water carrier should not only get from its rail connections the same proportionate rates as are given on through-rail business between identical termini, but an arrangement should be made under which the water carrier might, by accepting less money for its own service, establish lower joint through rates and thereby attract business to a relatively untried and in some respects less favorably situated route.

In place of repeating the trite and untrue charge that the river and harbor bill is a "pork barrel," the Senator would do well to try to build up the confidence of the business community to an extent sufficient to induce them to invest capital in and to use river transportation. He might try to ascertain the reasons why these great national highways are not more extensively used and, by devising practical plans for overcoming these objections, save the country each year considerably more than the amount of the appropriation he now decries.

In criticizing the grouping system, which was introduced by former Senator Burton and which has been used for a number of years, but which is used more extensively than ever before in the river and harbor bill recently enacted, Senator KENYON says:

The plan is to group a number of related projects under a lump appropriation, so that it can not be told how much of the money will go to any particular project. That is left to the engineers.

Again, in speaking of the appropriation for the Santee, Wateree, and Congaree Rivers, he says that this is—said to be all intended for the Congaree, but there was no way to know that for certain.

This statement also is very far from the truth. The engineers submit detailed estimates for all projects for which appropriations are specifically desired. These estimates were printed in a committee report, which was available not only to every Senator but to the general public. If the Senator did not have the time or did not care to take the trouble to look the matter up in this report, he could have been informed upon application to the chairman of the Commerce Committee, and, in fact, was informed during the consideration of the bill as to the exact amounts designated for a number of projects in the bill.

It often happens that because of favorable conditions the entire appropriation made for some projects is not needed during the course of the year, while because of emergencies which may arise a larger amount than estimated is needed for certain other projects.

The grouping system gives to the engineers a limited discretion to meet emergencies which may arise, and it seems a little odd to have a criticism of this limited discretion from a Senator who four times has tried, and twice has succeeded, to substitute lump-sum appropriations for bills in the regular form, under which the amount received by any one or all of the hundreds of waterways and harbors under their charge is left solely to the discretion of the engineers. The only logical conclusion that can be reached from the course followed by the Senator from Iowa is that in his opinion the exercise of unlimited discretion by the Army engineers in the distribution of appropriations for waterways and harbors is highly commendable, while a limited discretion is thoroughly objectionable.

In another place in the article referred to the Senator says:

I think the whole trouble we have got into in this country about river and harbor bills is the question of locality, of something for the benefit of a particular locality instead of a benefit to the entire Nation. This is the trouble with our country anyhow. We think along local lines.

During his extended remarks, when the rivers and harbors bill was under consideration, the Senator from Iowa made specific criticisms of 28 projects. In the statement which I hold, and which I ask permission to insert in the RECORD as a portion of my remarks without reading it in full, I have given the names of all these waterways, with the tonnage and the value of the commerce carried thereon in the calendar year 1915, and the appropriations for the fiscal year 1918 contained in the rivers and harbors act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, it will be noted that every one of the 28, without a single exception, is located in the South. The Senator gave a special criticism to the Pamlico and Tar Rivers, which really constitute one stream with different names in different parts. There were carried on this river in 1915, 286,716 tons of freight, and if he had gone carefully through the Report of the Chief of Engineers he would have found nearly 200 waterways and harbors located in the North—192 to be exact—which carried a smaller commerce than that of the Pamlico. I hope the Senator will not be offended if I commend to him the cultivation of a national instead of a sectional point of view.

It will also be noted that every one of the waterways which he specifically criticized is a river, although some of them are called creeks. He said many things, and bitter things, about rivers, but not a word against harbors. Apparently, he is suffering from what might be called fluvial hydrophobia. Harbors are railway terminals. They serve railways, while rivers compete, or may compete, with railways. Is it possible that this fact has any connection with the severe criticism of rivers and the entire lack of condemnation of harbors which characterized the remarks of the Senator from Iowa?

The Senator is reported in the article as saying that, in his opinion, "the appropriation carried in the measure was about $10,000,000 less than it would have been but for the war, but that another $10,000,000 could have been lopped off without injury to any of the legitimate projects mentioned in the bill."

In the course of the hours and days spent by the Senator from Iowa in criticizing the bill while it was under consideration he specifically mentioned the above-named 28 items, the aggregate appropriation for which was only $251,000. An additional $10,000,000 taken from the bill would have cut out the entire appropriation for all waterways and harbors carrying less than 1,000,000 tons of freight each and half of that for the waterways which carried between 1,000,000 and 5,000,000 tons each, the aggregate tonnage on these waterways being 92,910,883. Either this would have been the case, or there would have been a cut in the appropriations for the waterways carrying from 5,000,000 tons each to over 50,000,000 tons each, and I suppose even the Senator from Iowa will concede that waterways handling such amounts of traffic are "legitimate."

The Senator from Iowa devoted considerable attention to the Pamlico River, and showed that in this, as in a number of other instances, he had failed to give sufficient study to the reports of the Chief of Engineers to gain an accurate knowledge of the facts. Speaking of this river, he said:

There has apparently been considerable commerce, a complete commerce of 177,000 tons downstream and about 100,000 upstream, but when analyzed you discover that about 120,000 tons of that is timber. Timber and logs and matters of that kind can be floated downstream without all these tremendous appropriations.

In this case the "tremendous appropriations" amount to just $4,500 for the maintenance of a waterway which in 1915 carried 286,716 tons of commerce valued at $3,937,502. That is at the rate of 1½ cents for each ton and eleven one-hundredths of a cent for each dollar! A continuance of such wanton extravagance as that, Mr. President, will bring us to the verge of national bankruptcy!

The Senator understated the commerce carried and interchanged the tonnage handled upstream and downstream, respectively. He stated that about 120,000 tons were timber, but if he had really read the engineer's report, instead of merely glancing at it and jumping at conclusions, he would have found that most of this was handled in boats and barges which were larger or, at any rate, had a greater draft than the boats in which the rest of the commerce was carried, and that 128,500 tons of lumber, timber, and shingles were carried upstream. If the distinguished Senator from Iowa can make timber float upstream on a river, whether improved or unimproved, he can win both fame and fortune if he will tell the lumbermen of the United States how it can be done.

He lays great stress on the fact that the depth of the river at the extreme upper limit of navigation and at the time of low water is only 20 inches. He ignores the fact that the minimum low-water depth in the principal part of the river is 10 feet—which is just 4 feet greater than the minimum depth planned for the upper Mississippi—and the further fact that during several months in the year the available navigable depth in many of the rivers and harbors of the North is nothing at all, because they are frozen up. Ice in the North and low water in the South during a portion of the year do not, however, prevent the development of an important commerce. No doubt the Senator is busy; we all are; but if he will take the time to look over the reports of the engineers he will find that, since its improvement was begun in 1876, the Pamlico River has carried about $800 worth of commerce for each dollar spent on its improvement. It seems to me that a return of 800 for 1 is a matter for congratulation rather than for criticism.

At another place in the article he says:

We have spent in this country about $900,000,000 on rivers and harbors. Of this amount it is a perfectly safe estimate that half of it has been squandered.

Here again his statement is very wide of the truth. The fact has already been noted that his criticism has been entirely directed against rivers, from which it is natural to conclude that he considers the money appropriated for the improvement of harbors has been wisely expended. A tabulation made from the reports of the Chief of Engineers shows that, in round numbers, $500,000,000 has been expended on harbors and $400,000,000 on rivers. In making this tabulation some waterways which are called rivers, and even some called creeks, have been included with the harbors because they belong there, as, for instance, the Penobscot from Bangor to the sea, the Delaware below Philadelphia, the Mississippi below New Orleans, the Columbia below Portland, and East Chester, Westchester, and Newtown Creeks, which are parts of New York Harbor. On the other hand, so important a stream as the Hudson above New York City has been included with the rivers.

His statement is untrue, therefore, even if every dollar that has been spent on the rivers of the country has been squandered. But I do not believe that any sane and fair-minded man would attempt to claim that this is the case. We have spent over $13,000,000 on the Monongahela, but it is handling some 13,000,000 tons of traffic in a year, and if the carrying of coal on this river were stopped much of the bottom would drop out of the iron and steel industry of Pittsburgh. That money was certainly not wasted, nor was that spent on many other rivers which carry a commerce important at any time, but trebly important in these days of war when the railroads are overtaxed.

It is undoubtedly true that some of our rivers carry less commerce than formerly, but it is also true that for more than 50 years the railways in their competition with waterways were free to use any methods that the acutest intellect could devise and the most hardened conscience could execute; and everyone who has given the subject attention knows that they improved their opportunities in this direction to the very limit. It is my profound conviction that the railroads were shortsighted and that they really were working against their own interests. But be that as it may, many millions of dollars were appropriated for rivers during years when they were carrying a vast commerce, when, indeed, they furnished the only lines of communication except the dim trails of the wilderness, and the money spent on rivers at such times and under such conditions was certainly not squandered.

In the past, as I have already said, Mr. President, the railroads have used cutthroat methods of competition against waterways, which I emphatically disapprove. But having said that, I want also to say that the patriotic and efficient service which the railroads have rendered since our entrance into the world war deserves and should receive the unstinted praise of every loyal citizen of the United States. And to-day, Mr. President, we are confronted by an extraordinary and surprising spectacle. On the one hand we see the leading railway men of the country urging that the waterways be used, because there is more traffic to be moved than the railroads can possibly handle, and on the other we see the Senator from Iowa trying his best to cut down almost to the vanishing point the appropriations required to keep the waterways in condition to be used. I thoroughly agree with one criticism I have heard him make, and that is as to the system of dribbling appropriations for waterways, but from the time he became a Member of the Senate he has used his most earnest efforts not to increase the appropriations but to decrease the dribble to a drip.

At still another place in the article Senator KENYON says:

The people are really to blame, and their viewpoint as to what constitutes a statesman must change before any decided change takes place in the system upon which "pork" is founded. So long as their ideal of an efficient representative at Washington is the man who is able to get an appropriation to "improve" their Podunk Creek or to put up some public building far larger or more expensive than the community needs—so long as they meet such a returning statesman with a band and point to him with pride, saying, "See what he got for us"—just so long will "pork" continue to thrive.

This is pretty broad, Mr. President, but in his remarks on the river and harbor bill he put it still more broadly. As reported in the RECORD for August 3, page 5454, he made the following statement:

We might as well be perfectly frank about these little streams. Everybody knows it. It is not for commerce, but to help elect men to Congress. What is the use of going around the corner about that proposition? A man goes home with an appropriation for Contentnea Creek or Podunk Creek, or a public building, and he is tendered a great banquet, and leading orators pronounce him the greatest statesman we have had in modern times.

These statements, Mr. President, constitute an aspersion upon the intelligence and an indictment of the integrity of the Army engineers, of the Members of Congress in both Houses, and of the people of the United States. As to the Army engineers, without whose sanction, made after thorough surveys and investigations, no waterway project has legislative status, I commend to the Senator's attention the statement made by a gentleman of his own political faith, the distinguished leader of the minority in the House of Representatives, Mr. MANN, who is one of the ablest, sincerest, and most industrious men in Congress, and one who always makes sure of his facts. He says:

Whatever men may think about the merits of particular propositions in a bill, there is no legislation which comes before Congress which is so critically scanned by experts as are the river and harbor bills before they reach the House. . . . There are more processes involved, and far more expert men, wholly disinterested, unbiased, uncontrolled by politics, in reference to a river and harbor item than for any other legislation provided by any legislative assembly in the world. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 22, 1917, p. 1777.)

Fifty Members of the Senate and 204 Members of the House voted for the river and harbor bill. If the Senator means to charge that all of these Senators and Representatives are guilty of voting money out of the Treasury of the United States, not for commerce, but to aid in reelecting themselves to Congress, then the Congress of the United States is composed of dishonest men, for while such action may not technically violate any statute of the United States, I can see no difference morally between a Senator or a Member of Congress who votes money out of the Treasury for improper purposes in order to promote his own political fortunes and one, in Congress or out of it, who would put his hands into the pocket or the strong box of another man and extract money therefrom.

It is not my intention, Mr. President, to occupy the time of the Senate much further. I ask permission to insert as a portion of my remarks, without reading, an article entitled "The Waterways of the United States," prepared by Mr. S. A. Thompson, secretary and treasurer of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. This consists of three tables, with explanatory notes, compiled from the reports of the Chief of Engineers and the recently enacted river and harbor bill, in which will be found a great deal of valuable information.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

MR. RANSDELL. Table I gives, in a few lines, important facts concerning the 535 waterways and harbors included in the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1916, divided into classes according to the tonnage carried, with the tonnage and value of commerce carried by each class and the totals for all the classes. From this it appears that there were 229 waterways carrying less than 50,000 tons each, the aggregate tonnage for this class being 3,900,689, valued at $142,732,347. There were 5 waterways which carried over 50,000,000 tons each, the aggregate tonnage being 368,431,468, valued at $13,459,281,805. For all the waterways reported upon by the Chief of Engineers the freight carried during the calendar year 1915 was 936,123,661 tons, valued at $32,947,954,545.

An explanatory note makes it plain that this is not, and does not claim to be, a statement of the separate tons of freight carried. It is the sum of the tonnage carried on all the waterways and harbors of the United States, and therefore contains a considerable number of duplications. The most extreme instance of this kind occurs in relation to the traffic between Lake Superior and Lake Erie. Iron ore, for instance, is included no less than five times—first, when it is loaded at Duluth, Superior, or Marquette; then as it passes successively through the "Soo" Canal, the St. Clair Flats Canal, and the Detroit River; and finally when it is unloaded at Cleveland, Conneaut, or Ashtabula.

Practically all the tonnage reported on the Great Lakes is recorded twice, once when it is loaded at one port and again when it is unloaded at another. But the total commerce of the ports on the Lakes can not be shown unless both receipts and shipments are included and the standard depth in the channels and harbors of the Lakes must be continuously maintained or they can not be safely used by the splendid fleet of steamships which have made the commerce of the Lakes one of the modern wonders of the world.

If there are duplications on the one hand, on the other the unavoidable omissions are many in number and important in amount, because the machinery for gathering statistics of waterborne commerce in the United States is very far from being what it ought to be. For instance, the commerce, foreign and domestic, handled at the great port of Boston undoubtedly amounted to tens of millions of tons in volume and to hundreds of millions of dollars in value, but the only figures the engineers were able to secure were those showing the value of the foreign commerce of the port. The Mystic and Malden Rivers, in Massachusetts, carried some 3,800,000 tons of freight, but for more than half of this the value could not be ascertained, and in scores of other instances the engineers state that the commercial statistics reported by them are incomplete.

In the official report on "Transportation by Water," published by the Census Bureau for 1906, attention is called to the fact that there were a very large number of small boats regularly employed and carrying in the aggregate a large and increasing traffic for which no statistics were gathered. Every one in the least familiar with the facts knows that the number of motor boats now in use is enormously greater than in 1906. I have been told that there are more than 1,000 on one waterway in my own State of Louisiana—the Bayou Terrebonne. Besides those who carry freight as a business there are large numbers of farmers who use motor boats to carry their produce to market and bring home their supplies. In short, Mr. President, the water roads are being used in the same ways as the wagon roads; every one knows that the traffic in both cases is very large, but it is a practical impossibility to get a statement of the amount. It will be seen, therefore, that the duplications in these tables are largely, if not entirely, offset by the unavoidable omissions, making the totals approximately correct.

It is entirely natural, I suppose, that our attention should be attracted to the traffic handled in the great ports and on the great waterways of the country, but we must not overlook the fact that the smaller waterways and harbors, which are scattered all over our vast territory, and which, therefore, contribute to the development and prosperity of every part of the United States, carry a traffic which in the aggregate is enormous both in volume and in value. It is shown by the tables, which I have asked permission to insert in the RECORD, that there are 289 waterways and harbors which, in 1915, carried less than 100,000 tons each, and that the total amount of freight was 8,316,820 tons, valued at $252,968,679. What these figures really mean will be more clearly understood when I say that they are practically equal to the combined tonnage handled by Portland, Me., New Bedford and Fall River, Mass., and New London and New Haven, Conn., and to the aggregate value of the commerce of the six lake cities of Ashland, Marquette, Milwaukee, Toledo, Sandusky, and Conneaut.

There were 90 waterways and harbors, having a combined commerce of 129,482,329 tons, valued at $4,006,237,975, which were included in the Report of the Chief of Engineers but which were not included, either directly or indirectly, in the rivers and harbors act approved on August 8. Table II, therefore, shows the same facts contained in Table I regarding the 445 waterways which are mentioned in the rivers and harbors act, and in addition shows the really ridiculously small amount of the appropriations made in that act in proportion to the tonnage and the value of the commerce carried. For instance, the appropriation for the waterways carrying less than 50,000 tons amounted to only thirty-two and seventy-six one-hundredths cents for each ton of freight handled and to eighty-seven one-hundredths of a cent for each dollar of value. For the five waterways which carried over 50,000,000 tons of freight each the appropriation amounted to only six-tenths of a cent for each ton of freight and to one one-hundredth of a cent for each dollar of value. And for the entire 445 waterways mentioned in the rivers and harbors act the appropriation amounted, on the average, to only three and twenty-six hundredths cents for each ton of freight and to nine one-hundredths of a cent for each dollar of value.

A statement supplemental to Table II shows that if we ignore the known omissions in the statistics reported by the engineers and cut the totals absolutely in half in order to give full recognition to all possible duplications the $27,826,150 appropriated by the rivers and harbors act amounts to only six and eighty-one one-hundredths cents for each ton of traffic and to nineteen one-hundredths of a cent for each dollar of value of the commerce carried on the waterways and harbors of the United States in the calendar year 1915.

And this, Mr. President, is the bill which the Senator from Iowa spent days in denouncing, which the senior Senator from Utah called "rotten," the junior Senator from the same State declared involved "temerity and indecency" on the part of those who asked for such appropriations, and which the senior Senator from Idaho declared "could not be characterized in parliamentary language!"

Table III, while much longer than the other two, requires no extended comment. It is the foundation on which the other two are based. It gives the name and location of all the waterways and harbors included in the Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1916, the amount and value of the commerce carried by each in the calendar year 1915, and the amounts appropriated, either for single projects or for groups of projects, in the 1917 rivers and harbors act. The grouping used in that act is shown by brackets and the projects which were omitted from the act or for which no specific appropriations were made, although they were included in a group, are indicated by asterisks.

So far as I know, Mr. President, no similar compilation of facts relating to the waterways and harbors of the United States has ever been made, and I regard it as of the greatest value, because it shows the magnitude of our water-borne commerce and how insignificant in comparison are the appropriations carried in the annual rivers and harbors bills. Transportation is important in time of peace; it is absolutely vital in time of war. Indeed, Secretary Baker says, and truly, "This is a war of transportation." Because our railroads are overtaxed, it may depend upon our waterways whether our flag shall float in victory or go down in disaster and defeat. It follows, therefore, that every one who promotes the improvement, maintenance, and utilization of our waterways is helping to win the war, while one who takes the other course is imperiling the safety of the Nation and the future of civilization.

APPENDIX.

WATERWAYS AND HARBORS OF THE UNITED STATES.

TONNAGE AND VALUE OF COMMERCE CARRIED IN THE CALENDAR YEAR 1915, AS REPORTED BY THE ARMY ENGINEERS, COMPARED WITH THE APPROPRIATIONS CONTAINED IN THE RIVERS AND HARBORS ACT OF 1917.

[Compiled by S. A. Thompson, secretary and treasurer National Rivers and Harbors Congress, Washington, D. C.]

Once in 10 years the Census Bureau publishes a special report on "Transportation by water" in the United States, the one last issued bearing date of 1908 and giving data for 1906. The Census Bureau is now engaged in securing the data for a report covering the year 1916, which will be issued some time in 1918.

In December of each year a report is issued by the Chief of Engineers, which gives in great detail the operations of the Corps of Engineers for the fiscal year ending on the preceding 30th of June, and including statements showing the tonnage and value of the commerce handled on each of the waterways and harbors of the United States during the preceding calendar year. The latest published Report of the Chief of Engineers was issued in December, 1916, and the commercial statistics given therein refer to the calendar year 1915.

In the Reports of the Chief of Engineers, and during the consideration of rivers and harbors bills in Congress as well, the hundreds of waterways in the United States are reported on or discussed separately, but no summing up is made which gives the main facts concerning all the waterways. There are few things outside the realm of mathematics as to which there is not room for an honest difference of opinion, but criticism, to be intelligent and constructive, must be based upon a knowledge of all the facts. Much of the indiscriminate and destructive criticism which has been uttered against rivers and harbors bills has been due to a failure to realize the magnitude of the interests involved and the insignificance of the appropriations made in proportion to the volume and value of the traffic carried. These facts are clearly shown in the following tables.

In Table I the 535 waterways and harbors included in the latest Report of the Chief of Engineers have been divided into nine classes according to the tonnage carried, the number of waterways in each class is stated and the volume and value of the commerce carried is given for each class separately and for all the classes combined.

There were 90 waterways and harbors having a combined commerce of 129,482,329 tons valued at $4,006,237,975, which were included in the report of the Chief of Engineers, but which were not included, either directly or indirectly, in the 1917 rivers and harbors act. Table II gives the same facts with reference to the 445 waterways and harbors for which provision was made, either directly or indirectly, in the rivers and harbors act, and in addition shows, for each class with averages for all the classes, the number of tons and the value of the commerce carried for each dollar of the appropriation made, and also the amount appropriated for each ton of freight and dollar of value of the commerce carried.

to market and bring back their supplies. The traffic on the waterways of the country, like the traffic on its highways, is known to every one to be enormous in volume; but it is a practical impossibility to secure exact statistics as to the tonnage. It will be seen, therefore, that the duplications in these tables are largely, if not entirely, offset by the omissions so that the totals are approximately correct.

If, however, the omissions contained in the statistics reported by the engineers are ignored entirely and the totals given are cut square in two in order to give full recognition to all possible duplications, the $27,826,150 appropriated by the rivers and harbors act of 1917 amounts to only 6.81 cents for each ton of traffic and to less than one-fifth of a cent (nineteen one-hundredths) for each dollar of value of the commerce carried on the waterways and harbors of the United States in the calendar year 1915.

The sum of the appropriations for the different classes of waterways included in Table III is $26,314,450, while the total of the appropriations contained in the rivers and harbors act is $27,826,150. The following statement shows the purposes for which the difference of $1,511,700 was appropriated.

Table III, while much longer than the other two, requires little comment. In it will be found the name and the geographical location of every waterway and harbor mentioned either in the Report of the Chief of Engineers or the rivers and harbors act, with the amount and value of the commerce carried thereon in the calendar year 1915. The grouping of projects in the rivers and harbors act is shown by brackets and the asterisks indicate projects for which no appropriation was made.

It should be clearly understood that the totals of tonnage stated in these tables is not, and does not claim to be, a statement of the separate tons of freight handled. They represent the sum of the tonnage reported by the engineers on the different waterways and harbors of the United States, and, because of the conditions under which they are gathered, they involve both duplications and omissions.

The most extreme instance of duplication occurs in relation to the traffic between Lake Superior and Lake Erie. Iron ore, for instance, is included no less than five times. First, when it is loaded at Duluth, Superior, or Marquette; then as it passes successively through the "Soo" Canal, the St. Clair Flats Canal, and the Detroit River; and finally when it is unloaded at Cleveland, Conneaut, or Ashtabula. Practically all the tonnage reported on the Great Lakes is recorded twice—once when it is loaded at one port, and again when it is unloaded at another. But the total commerce of the ports on the Great Lakes can not be shown unless the receipts and the shipments are both included, and the standard depth in the channels and harbors of the Lakes must be continuously maintained or they can not be safely used by the great steamships in which the commerce of the Lakes is carried.

If there are duplications on the one hand, on the other the unavoidable omissions are many in number and important in amount, because the machinery for gathering statistics of water-borne commerce in the United States is very far from being what it ought to be. For instance, the commerce, foreign and domestic, handled at the great port of Boston undoubtedly amounted to tens of millions of tons in volume and to hundreds of millions of dollars in value; but the only figures the engineers were able to secure were those showing the value of the foreign commerce of the port. The Mystic and Malden Rivers, in Massachusetts, carried some 3,800,000 tons of freight, but for more than half of this the value could not be ascertained, and in scores of other instances the engineers state that the commercial statistics reported by them are incomplete.

In the official report on Transportation by Water, published by the Census Bureau for the year 1906, it is said:

"The limitation of the census to vessels of 5 tons or over results in the exclusion of a large number of steam, gasoline, and electric launches engaged in the regular freight and passenger traffic on the lakes, bays, and rivers of the country. The number of these small vessels has increased very rapidly during recent years, and their aggregate annual business has now assumed considerable proportions."

Every one in the least familiar with the facts knows that the number of motor boats now in use is vastly greater than it was in 1906. Not only are they regularly used in carrying freight and passengers for hire, but there are many farmers who use motor boats to carry their produce

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I accept with fortitude, as much as I can summon, the castigation of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL]. I only regret that he did not deliver it at a time when a larger proportion of the Senate was present; but the usual result of any river and harbor discussion is apparent, in that practically all of the Senators have left the Chamber, and the desks, being screwed down, are not able to do so.

I suppose it is perhaps an unwise thing for a Member of Congress to be interviewed about questions in Congress. I have always had some little doubt about the wisdom of that. I have felt such an interest in the river and harbor bill that I did give the interview to which reference has been made, I suppose substantially as the Senator has related it here. There may be some errors in the figures. Not being an officer of any society having the use of experts, or funds to gather figures, I had to get my own figures; but as to the general statements of the interview I have no apologies to make, and no retractions.

Nearly everybody knows, even if the Senator from Louisiana does not, that both the river and harbor bill and the public-buildings bill have grown out of a system that the country has come to understand as a pork-barrel system. I am not impugning the motives of any man or the honesty of any man or claiming any higher citizenship than any other man. I believe the system is wrong, outrageously wrong, and results in a robbery of the Public Treasury for local benefit.

The Senator seems to think that I am imputing wrong to Members of Congress because I referred in that article to that fact as I view it. It is something that has grown up in the country. We have bills here for public buildings—one that passed the House at the last session but did not come out of the committee in the Senate—that actually contained appropriations for building in towns of less than 700 population.

Perhaps some people can justify that. I do not see how it can be justified. We had presented here, if the term could be used, a pork-barrel fish-hatchery bill as a war measure, because the meat supply was short, and we needed fish in order to carry on the war, and consequently it was very essential to have a fish hatchery in the district of nearly every member of the committee dealing with that subject. That is what I mean by the growth of the pork barrel.

The Senator says that I charge, in the article to which he has referred, that at least one-half of the $900,000,000 appropriated for rivers and harbors is wasted. I do, and I charge it now. He said that I found no objection to the harbor appropriations, and consequently, the river appropriations being a little more than half of the $900,000,000, that I was in the position of objecting to all river appropriations, but no harbor appropriations. There is no doubt in the world that money has been wasted in every branch of governmental activity. There is no doubt that money has been wasted on harbors, perhaps as much as on rivers, though I doubt if there has been as much money wasted on harbors as on rivers; and the Senator insinuates, because no objection has been made to harbors, that consequently those who fight the river and harbor bill are, in fact, helping the railroads. That is the old argument used when anyone fights this waste.

I have not been an opponent of river and harbor legislation. That is not the thing to which some of us have been objecting. We have been objecting to the waste in the bill, which has gone into the millions, and everybody knows it, and no charges of attempting to serve the railroads in this matter will, I think, deter for one instant the gentlemen who honestly believe the river and harbor bill has grown to be a scandalous pork barrel from making their criticisms of it here and in other places.

The result, at least, of the fight against the system under which river and harbor bills have been built up was apparent in the last bill, in which the Congress adopted a commission. Out of that commission I am sure will come better results, coordination between the different activities of the Government, and less of waste and extravagance. I think that provision of the bill will receive the sanction of the people of the country.

Mr. President, I did not mean to engage in any particular remarks on this subject. Nothing ever comes up about the river and harbor bill but that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana engages in an explosion. There was nothing, as I understood it, in this article reflecting in any way upon Members of Congress. I do not believe in doing that. I would not do that. I do believe, however, that the system of appropriations that has grown up ought to be stopped, that there was no justification for many of the items in the last river and harbor bill, and especially no justification at a time when this country is engaged in war, and we are to expend, as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee indicated a few days ago, at least $20,000,000,000 and perhaps $50,000,000,000 before this year has gone by. While items of a few million dollars seem inconsequential, and it almost seems a breach of senatorial courtesy to talk about them, yet the appropriations of this Congress should have been, and I hope they have been, scanned closely, and every dollar of waste, if such a thing is possible, cut out of them. That will face us more and more as the Congresses go on.

The American people are perfectly willing to spend every dollar necessary to carry this war to a successful conclusion. I think they have a right to participate in the knowledge of how that money is spent, unless it be in some secret military matters that none of us would insist on knowing about; and they have a right to insist, also, that all waste and extravagance in expenditures stop, and that the public money be spent like private money, and that a public dollar bring to the Government just what a private dollar would bring.

I regret if I have in any way offended my good friend from the State of Louisiana. I said in the article that in my judgment the river and harbor bill was a pork-barrel measure. I repeat it now. I shall say it whenever I feel like saying it; and I have said nothing about it equal to what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] said about river and harbor appropriations upon this floor. I suppose he meant the wasteful ones. I will not repeat his language. It is in the Record, and has been referred to a good many times. I shall not desist in my condemnation of the waste in river and harbor bills.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator from Florida will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, permit me to say this much in reference to what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has said. The incidental remark made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN] has been animadverted on a number of times here. It was made some years ago and he has on different occasions set forth quite fully what he meant and what he had reference to at that time. It has no bearing, I think, on this subject, and is without force when it comes to deal with river and harbor legislation.

The last bill was a bill that was confined absolutely to preventing waste. In other words, it was to take care of projects which were under consideration and where if the work was not continued there would be an enormous waste of money. There would be waste also in turning loose some fifty-odd plants of the Government—dredges and equipment and that sort of thing—and having them lie idle for a period of time until another bill could be passed.

Another feature in connection with the legislation was the absolute necessity of the improvement of certain harbors whereby access could be got to navy yards.

Another feature was to take care of necessary projects which were required for the transportation business of the country. There was no war emergency more important than the enactment of that legislation as recommended by the Secretary of War and by the Chief of Engineers and as reported by both committees of Congress.

It is just such articles or interviews as the Senator has dictated, just such comment as the Senator makes in denouncing river and harbor legislation as pork-barrel legislation, that are responsible for the prejudice against river and harbor legislation and the poison in the public mind on this subject to a very large extent.

The Senator from Iowa says in a general way he is not opposing taking care of the rivers and harbors of the country, but he objects to the system which has been prevailing. I have been unable to gather what plan the Senator had in mind to carry on what he regards as great public works. He criticizes the existing system, calls it a pork-barrel plan, but he does not offer anything else. Yet he says these rivers ought to be made available for the movement of commerce and that the harbors ought to be improved. Every other civilized country on the earth has found it necessary to do that.

The demands upon our transportation facilities are greater to-day than they ever have been before, and we need every possible development of transportation facilities in this country. We are doing what we are obliged to do, unless we simply abandon the waterways and adopt a policy which is unwise and unsound and which would involve an absolute neglect of the responsibility of Congress in that regard.

It is hoped that the commission provided for will eventually evolve some coordination and cooperation on the part of the railroads and the waterways of the country and result in good. It is possible that there will be somewhat of a revision of the plan upon which these public works have been taken care of heretofore. I hope that will result, but until that is accomplished we can not afford to neglect to look after these means of transportation.

I would say further in regard to this question of waste, according to the testimony of Gen. Bixby, supported by other Chiefs of Engineers, there has not been as much as 2 per cent of the money appropriated for rivers and harbors in this country that has not been absolutely and fully meritorious. Not exceeding 2 per cent of the entire amount of money appropriated for that purpose can be questioned on the score of waste. That is their testimony. That is the statement they make. So the general averment that there has been enormous waste in connection with the improvement of these waterways, it seems to me, can not be allowed to stand against the positive, solemn statement of Chiefs of Engineers who have had the distribution of that fund in hand.

Another thing, we have pretty nearly reached the end of the improvement of the rivers of the country. This policy began over 50 years ago. That perhaps accounts for some of the opposition to-day to river and harbor legislation. To the fact that the rivers have been taken care of in most of the States of the country probably can be attributed the reason why we hear so much talk about its being pork-barrel legislation. Wherever rivers and harbors have been developed and improved the representatives of those communities are no longer interested in the subject. For instance, take Florida, where we have numerous navigable streams to be connected up with lakes and rivers and with the ocean and with the Gulf that have not been improved in the past. Representatives and Senators in other parts of the country where the rivers and harbors have been improved to the very limit are no longer interested in the subject, and they can not agree that Florida should be treated in accordance with the policy which has obtained in the country for 50 years, in pursuance of which their rivers and harbors have been taken care of by the Government, as they ought to have been. They are done with the subject, and to them it is a waste when it comes to improving the rivers and harbors in some other portions of the country. I think that accounts for a good deal of this apathy, this lack of interest, this indifference, this charge of pork, because it comes from people who have had their rivers and harbors improved, who have enjoyed the benefits of these public expenditures, or it comes from people whose rivers and harbors are not worthy of improvement, and have been repeatedly reported upon adversely by the engineers.

I simply wanted to say that much, and to say in conclusion that, in my judgment, we have nearly reached the end. If the Senator from Iowa will look at the projects under investigation, the number that have been rejected and the number of projects suggested for the engineers to look into and report upon, he will find they have been diminishing year after year; that there are comparatively few projects now in the country where surveys are asked at all, and according to the proportion surveys have been reported on adversely by the engineers there will be but a small number of rivers that will be reported on favorably by the engineers in the due course of things under the present system, and only those that are reported on favorably will be provided for by Congress. I think we have nearly reached the end of river and harbor bills such as we have been having in the past, because we have pretty nearly taken care of the rivers that are worthy of improvement and the harbors up to the demands of the country. Later on we may need to deepen some of the harbors. Where, for instance, they are 30 feet to-day the necessities of the country may exact that they shall be made 40 feet, because we are having larger vessels and it is necessary to have 40 feet in some instances to-day where 10 years ago 30 feet were ample. Of course when those conditions arise it will be our duty to take care of that situation in a broad and public-spirited and proper way.

Mr. RANDELL. Just a word, Mr. President, if you please. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a little matter of history. Last year we had a river and harbor bill which carried about $42,000,000. It was very strenuously opposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and many others, not only in this body, but in the House of Representatives. That bill was finally signed by the President about the last of July. At that time the President was a candidate for reelection, and I believe everyone will admit that he is one of the most astute, wise, farseeing statesmen who ever occupied the White House. He held that river and harbor bill under advisement for the constitutional limit—10 days, I believe—before signing it, and before signing it this letter was laid before him by the Secretary of War, Hon. Newton D. Baker, our present War Secretary, who, it seems to me, is making good, if ever a Secretary of War did make good, in a great crisis. He alluded to our present Chief of Engineers, Gen. William M. Black, one of the strongest men who ever occupied that very responsible position. This letter is dated July 24, 1916, and says:

JULY 24, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I return to you herewith the river and harbor bill, which I have gone over with great care and upon which I hand you a report made by the Chief of Engineers with certain attached memoranda. The net result of this examination is to show that in this bill, carrying $42,886,085, $611,200, or about 1½ per cent, is, in the judgment of the Engineer Department of the War Department, regarded as economically indefensible, although in the case of some of these expenditures the improvements are probably not primarily for navigation purposes.

I concur in the view expressed by Gen. Black that the direct loss to the United States as a result of suspension of work, were this bill not to receive your approval, would be greater than the amount appropriated for improvements of a doubtful value; that is to say, upon all the great river and harbor projects of the country, if work were suspended, there would be loss due to the breaking up of existing organizations, the care of idle plants, etc., which would be very serious. Should this bill receive your approval, the department would have so much work on its hands that it would probably be obliged to delay some portion of it, and, of course, in selecting that to be delayed, the work of doubtful economic importance would be postponed, so that the entire $611,200 marked as questionable would probably not be expended in any event.

Respectfully submitted.

NEWTON D. BAKER.

Mr. President, that bill was signed by President Wilson, although it had, according to the Engineers Department, a total of 1½ per cent of doubtful wisdom in it. At that time, let me repeat, the President was a candidate for reelection. His political opponents were justly looking into every cause to be brought against him. The President examined that bill with care; his Secretary of War examined it with care; his Chief of Engineers examined it with care, and they found it a good measure.

The bill which passed a few weeks ago, the bill which was criticised by the Senator from Iowa, indicating that $10,000,000 out of $28,000,000 might very well have been left out of the bill, was a much more conservative bill than the bill of 1916. Had it been examined with a fine-tooth comb, sir, you could not have found anything like 1½ per cent therein about which there was even any kind of doubt. It was as good a bill as could have possibly been framed. Yet that is subjected to criticism.

Mr. President, unfortunately a great many people in this country speak of river and harbor legislation as being pork barrel, and I insist, sir, that that prejudice is due to just such statements as the Senator from Iowa has published in this recent issue of the New York Times.

Mr. KENYON. Just a word, Mr. President.

I agree with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] in his commendation of the President, and having that great regard and confidence which I have in the President, I offered at the time the river and harbor bill was before us this as an additional section. I want to put it in the RECORD, and also the vote upon it.

SEC. — That no appropriation contained in this bill shall be available if the President of the United States, on or before September 1, 1917, shall file a statement with the Secretary of War that such particular project for which said appropriation is made is not one of a public necessity.

The President has no right under the Constitution to veto items in an appropriation bill. This gave him the power, if there was any particular appropriation in the bill that was not of a public necessity, to end it. Now, with the great confidence which the Senator from Louisiana has in the President, how did he vote on that question? Among the "nays" is recorded the Senator from Louisiana. Among the "yeas" is recorded myself, the object of the Senator's wrath. I submit the full vote, as follows:

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Harding	Norris	Sutherland
Borah	Hollis	Page	Thompson
Brady	Kenyon	Pomerene	Tillman
Calder	King	Shafroth	Warren
Cummins	La Follette	Sheppard	Watson
France	McNary	Smoot
Gore	New	Sterling

NAYS—36.

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Randell	Smith, Mich.
Brandeggee	Kirby	Reed	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Lodge	Robinson	Stone
Fernald	McKellar	Saulsbury	Swanson
Fletcher	Martin	Shields	Trammell
Gerry	Myers	Simmons	Underwood
Hale	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Vardaman
Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—34.

Broussard	Gronna	Knox	Sherman
Colt	Hardwick	Lewis	Thomas
Culberson	Hitchcock	McCumber	Townsend
Curtis	Hughes	McLean	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Husting	Newlands	Walsh
Fall	James	Owen	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Williams
Gallinger	Kellogg	Phelan
Goff	Kendrick	Pittman

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was rejected.

We had that confidence in the President that would end this business, and apparently, while the Senator from Louisiana has confidence in the President as to everything on earth, putting in his hands all power, as we have also, his confidence stops short at the place where the President would have the power to smash the pork barrel. The vote on this amendment ought to be of interest to the voters.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the unfinished business before the Senate is House bill 2316, commonly known as the export bill. I am satisfied that it is impossible this afternoon to bring the measure to a final vote, and because of that fact I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CALDER. Before that is determined I should like to say that I hope the Senator from Ohio will at the first favorable opportunity press his bill to a vote. It is a very important measure. In my judgment there has been no bill before this body dealing with the business of the country beyond its borders more important than the measure under consideration here.

Mr. POMERENE. I agree with the estimate of the bill just given by the Senator from New York. The manufacturers and the commercial men of the entire United States are interested in it. It affects our foreign business, and our foreign business only. The policy that we can pursue with respect to the foreign business, if we are to get our portion of it, must be very different from that which we adopt in our domestic business.

There is no desire to repeal or modify the Sherman antitrust law or any other antitrust law, save and except, possibly, as it may be believed to relate to our foreign business.

In the foreign countries to-day the merchants and manufacturers and business men generally are allowed to combine to go out and seek the foreign trade, and they do combine for that purpose. If we are to meet them upon a fair basis of competition, we must place in the hands of our business men the same methods which the business men of other nations use in seeking foreign trade.

The only question which presents itself to Congress is this: Do you want to extend America's foreign business or do you not? Do you or do you not want American business men to have the same advantages that the business men of other nations have? If Senators do, they will favor this bill. If they do not, they will oppose it.

I may say to the Senator from New York that I have been somewhat chagrined, because I have concluded, after an investigation, that it would be next to impossible to pass the bill at this session. If the opportunity presents itself during the session, I shall urge it to a speedy conclusion. If it is not reached and finally voted upon at this session, it is my purpose to insist upon the Senate taking action upon it at the very beginning of the next session.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to say to him that I shall aid him in every way in my power, for I consider it to be a very meritorious measure. Particularly if from any cause the war should end, we would be up against a competition that could not be measured. It is serious indeed to contemplate that situation.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is quite right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. HUSTING. Inasmuch as the bill now before the Senate is an important bill, and there seems to be a sentiment that it ought to be acted upon, without expressing any opinion of my own one way or the other upon it, in view of the fact that I am opposed to having the bill laid aside to take up a bill which is very objectionable, I shall have to object to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that if a motion is made to take up another bill, that of itself displaces the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to lay aside the unfinished business is not in order, but a motion to take up another bill would be in order.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been advised that from a parliamentary standpoint a motion perhaps would not be in order, and therefore I withdraw it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move that the Senate take up for further consideration the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUSTING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Calder	Husting	New	Sheppard
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, Ariz.
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Swanson
Fall	Kenyon	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	King	Reed
Gerry	McNary	Shafroth

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. HUSTING. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], and the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned until Monday, October 1, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, September 29, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art supremely good, all wise and powerful, touch us, we beseech Thee, with Thy spirit, that our eyes may be opened amid all the perplexing questions of life and the sin which doth so easily beset us to the path of duty, and give us the courage and Christian manhood to walk therein, with all faith and confidence, leaving the results to Thee who doest all things well. This we ask in the faith and the hope and the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, the world's great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to file for printing under the rule the conference report upon the bill H. R. 4280, the revenue bill, together with the statement of the managers, at any time before 12 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to file the conference report on the revenue bill, together with the statement of the managers, at any time before midnight to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. To be printed in the Record to-night.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman when he expects to call the bill up for consideration?

Mr. KITCHIN. On Monday next. The report will be printed in the Record to-night.

Mr. MADDEN. And it is the intention of the gentleman to call it up the first thing on Monday after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Can we get a copy of the bill to-day?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it will be printed to-night and copies may be had to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On August 7, 1917:

H. R. 3331. An act for the protection of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

On August 8, 1917:

H. R. 4285. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

On August 10, 1917:

H. R. 4188. An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products; and

H. R. 4961. An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

On September 24, 1917:

H. R. 5901. An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

On September 25, 1917:

S. 2830. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.; and

S. 2477. An act to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department.

On September 28, 1917:

H. R. 5335. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5949) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 13.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to insert after the word "explosives," in the first proviso of section 5 of the bill as agreed to in conference, the words "are not subject to the provision of this act."

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read from the Clerk's desk, without comment upon my part, a letter from the Secretary of State, which has just been received.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to have read and printed in the Record a letter from the Secretary of State, without any comment on his own part. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this letter relates to any controversy as between the State Department and the House of Representatives?

Mr. POUL. I do not think it relates to any controversy. It is a very specific declaration on the part of the State Department which I think the House of Representatives would like to hear.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the judgment of the gentleman, is it such a letter as will provoke a controversy this morning on the floor of the House?

Mr. POUL. I do not think it is. If it were, I would not offer it.

The SPEAKER. It will not, else the Chair would not have recognized the gentleman to offer it. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 28, 1917.

Hon. EDWARD W. POUL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. POUL: In response to your inquiry over the telephone to-day, addressed to the department, I beg to inform you that the State Department has no evidence that could in any way connect a Member of Congress with the payment of money by the German Embassy in its propaganda activities.

I take the liberty of quoting a statement issued by the Secretary of State on September 22, which indicates his opinion on this subject:

"If there is any misunderstanding, I wish to say very emphatically I do not see how the Bernstorff message in any way reflects upon Congress or any Member. Apparently it was the purpose to employ agencies to influence them of which they would have no knowledge and in case they were influenced would be entirely innocent. I do not know what the organization was. This exposé is apropos of German methods of peace propaganda and there is no intention of casting suspicion on Members of Congress."

Believe me, my dear Mr. Poul,

Yours, very truly,

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LARSEN for two days, on account of important business on behalf of constituents.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DURANT, OKLA.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6094) amending the act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, and so forth. This bill does not involve any appropriation at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Are we to understand that the report upon the revenue bill will take precedence over unanimous-consent business on Monday next, which is unanimous-consent day?

The SPEAKER. It will not, unless unanimous consent is had to set that bill aside.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course there can not be any great pressure for considering this bill and other bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent if the calendar is to be considered on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer whether the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be considered on Monday or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from North Carolina gave notice that he was going to bring up the report on the revenue bill on Monday. I assume from that that he intends sometime to ask to dispense with business in order on Monday next.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the only urgent necessity for the consideration of this bill is the fact that a contract has been let for a public building and it can not be completed as the Treasury Department thinks it should be on account of the authorizations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes" (Public No. 432), and all other authorizations and appropriations passed in pursuance thereof for the construction of a post office at Durant, Okla., be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize and appropriate the use of funds apportioned to Durant, Okla., for the construction and equipment of a United States post office and other Government offices at Durant, Okla.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma how much this increases the limit of cost, as the bill does not say?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It does not increase the cost at all, and no appropriation is made here. It simply provides that the appropriation which was made for the post office might be used for the post office and other Government offices. Now, if the gentleman will let me explain for a moment further, when the public building was authorized at Durant in 1913 there were no other Government activities at Durant. Since that time there has been established there an Indian agency of about six to eight persons, some agricultural agents, two or three in number, I think, a civil-service examination board, post-office inspector, and a naval recruiting station. The letter of the department does not set out in detail these things, but does set out the necessity for the legislation. Since the letter was sent to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I have gotten in communication with Mr. Wetmore and he furnished me the other Government agencies that would have to be cared for, and it amounts to some 10 to 18 persons.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask what the population of the town of Durant is?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The population in 1915 was some 5,300. The school census taken last year indicates a population of something over 10,000.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the limit of cost placed on the building that is authorized to be erected there now?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Eighty-five thousand dollars, building and site. There is no increase provided in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But this bill contemplates an increase; there can not be any doubt of that.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This bill contemplates the use of a fund which the department had not contemplated using and perhaps it contemplates taking off some things from the building in the way of ornamentation, and so forth, and using it to provide more room space.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman assure the House that the necessities of the other activities in this building will not increase the cost?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Absolutely, if the Treasury Department officials can be believed, because it is set out in the letter, which perhaps the gentleman has not had time to read—

Mr. MADDEN. I have read it. If there is no increase in the cost—

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that I shall not ask for any increase in cost. That is as far as I can go. I can not, of course, commit the Treasury Department.

Mr. MADDEN. But when the Treasury Department gets the power to use a fund for other purposes than the one originally intended, of course they will make plans for doubling this building and will come in here and ask for appropriations carrying more than twice the amount originally appropriated.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not think so. I do not think that will be necessary, because they have several thousand dollars left not to be used anyway.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The situation as I understand it is this: There is sufficient money available to construct the character and type of building to accommodate these additional governmental activities. The Treasury Department does not feel authorized to so construct a building as to provide for them in view of the fact that nothing but post-office activities were provided for in the original bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is true, and the comptroller has ruled that the funds can not be used for the construction of anything except a building for post-office purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, I think that the department does sometimes provide for other Government activities not specifically mentioned in the law, but in some cases, as in this, they have declined to do so, and therefore it seems entirely proper that additional authority, if it is necessary, should be granted.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. Instead of costing any more this will probably save, for if it is not passed the Government will have to pay the cost of renting offices for these other activities. Assurances have been given that they will not ask the committee or Congress to increase the appropriation and instead of increasing the amount that it will cost it will probably save the Government the necessity of renting other buildings for these other activities if it is not granted, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, took that into consideration in addition to the fact that no additional appropriation would be asked.

Mr. NORTON rose.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, on yesterday—
The SPEAKER. Let us see about that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the discussion of this bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, unless I can address the House for 10 minutes I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a perfect right to object.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make that request during the discussion of this bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, then I object.

EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3932).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 168).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the words 'explosive' and 'explosives' when used herein shall mean gunpowders, powders used for blasting, all forms of high explosives, blasting materials, fuses, detonators, and other detonating agents, smokeless powders, and any chemical compound or mechanical mixture that contains any oxidizing and combustible units, or other ingredients, in such proportions, quantities or packing that ignition by fire, by friction, by concussion, by percussion, or by detonation of, or any part of the compound or mixture may cause such a sudden generation of highly heated gases that the resultant gaseous pressures are capable of producing destructive effects on contiguous objects, or of destroying life or limb, but shall not include small-arms or shotgun cartridges: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the manufacture, under the authority of the Government, of explosives for, their sale to or their possession by, the military or naval service of the United States of America.

"SEC. 3. That the word 'ingredients' when used herein shall mean the materials and substances capable by combination of producing one or more of the explosives mentioned in section 1 hereof.

"SEC. 4. That the word 'person,' when used herein, shall include States, Territories, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and other dependencies of the United States, and municipal subdivisions thereof, individual citizens, firms, associations, societies and corporations of the United States and of other countries at peace with the United States.

"SEC. 5. That from and after 40 days after the passage and approval of this act no person shall have in his possession or purchase, accept, receive, sell, give, barter or otherwise dispose of or procure explosives, or ingredients, except as provided in this act: Provided, That the purchase or possession of said ingredients when purchased or held in small quantities and not used or intended to be used in the manufacture of explosives:

Provided further, That the superintendent, foreman, or other duly authorized employee, at a mine, quarry, or other work, may, when licensed so to do, sell or issue, to any workman under him, such an amount of explosives, or ingredients, as may be required by that workman in the performance of his duties, and the workman may purchase or accept the explosives, or ingredients, so sold or issued, but the person so selling or issuing same shall see that any unused explosives, or ingredients, are returned, and that no explosives, or ingredients, are taken by the workman to any point not necessary to the carrying on of his duties.

"SEC. 6. That nothing contained herein shall apply to explosives or ingredients while being transported upon vessels or railroad cars in conformity with statutory law or Interstate Commerce Commission rules.

"SEC. 7. That from and after 40 days after the passage of this act no person shall manufacture explosives unless licensed so to do, as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 8. That any licensee or applicant for license hereunder shall furnish such information regarding himself and his business, so far as such business relates to or is connected with explosives or ingredients at such time and in such manner as the Director of the Bureau of Mines, or his authorized representative, may request, excepting that those who have been or are at the time of the passage of this act regularly engaged in the manufacture of explosives shall not be compelled to disclose secret processes, costs, or other data unrelated to the distribution of explosives.

"SEC. 9. That from and after 40 days after the passage and approval of this act every person authorized to sell, issue, or dispose of explosives shall keep a complete itemized and accurate record, showing each person to whom explosives are sold, given, bartered, or to whom or how otherwise disposed of, and the quantity and kind of explosives, and the date of each such sale, gift, barter, or other disposition; and this record shall be sworn to and furnished to the Director of the Bureau of Mines, or his authorized representatives, whenever requested.

"SEC. 10. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to issue licenses as follows:

"(a) Manufacturer's license, authorizing the manufacture, possession, and sale of explosives and ingredients.

"(b) Vendor's license, authorizing the purchase, possession, and sale of explosives or ingredients.

"(c) Purchaser's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients.

"(d) Foreman's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients, and the sale and issuance of explosives and ingredients to workmen under the proviso to section 5 above.

"(e) Exporter's license, authorizing the licensee to export explosives, but no such license shall authorize exportation in violation of any proclamation of the President issued under any act of Congress.

"(f) Importer's license, authorizing the licensee to import explosives.

"(g) Analyst's, educator's, inventor's, and investigator's licenses authorizing the purchase, manufacture, possession, testing, and disposal of explosives and ingredients.

"SEC. 11. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines shall issue licenses, upon application duly made, but only to citizens of the United States of America, and to the subjects or citizens of nations that are at peace with them, and to corporations, firms, and associations thereof, and he may, in his discretion, refuse to issue a license, when he has reason to believe, from facts of which he has knowledge or reliable information, that the applicant is disloyal or hostile to the United States of America, or that, if the applicant is a firm, association, society, or corporation, its controlling stockholders or members are disloyal or hostile to the United States of America. The director may, when he has reason to believe on like grounds that any licensee is so disloyal or hostile, revoke any license issued to him. Any applicant to whom a license is refused or any licensee whose license is revoked by the said director may, at any time within 30 days after notification of the rejection of his application or revocation of his license, apply for such license or the cancellation of such revocation to the Council of National Defense, which shall make its order upon the director either to grant or to withhold the license.

"SEC. 12. That any person desiring to manufacture, sell, export, import, store, or purchase explosives or ingredients, or to keep explosives or ingredients in his possession, shall make application for a license, which application shall state, under oath, the name of the applicant; the place of birth; whether native born or naturalized citizen of the United States of America; if a naturalized citizen, the date and place of naturalization; business in which engaged; the amount and kind of explosives or ingredients which during the past six months have been purchased, disposed of, or used by him; the amount and kind of explosives or ingredients now on hand; whether sales, if any, have been made to jobbers, wholesalers, retailers, or consumers; the kind of license to be issued, and the kind and amount of explosives or ingredients to be authorized by the license; and such further information as the Director of the Bureau of Mines may, by rule, from time to time require.

"Applications for vendor's, purchaser's, or foreman's licenses shall be made to such officers of the State, Territory, or dependency having jurisdiction in the district within which the explosives or ingredients are to be sold or used, and having the power to administer oaths as may be designated by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, who shall issue the same in the name of such director. Such officers shall be entitled to receive from the applicant a fee of 25 cents for each license issued. They shall keep an accurate record of all licenses issued in manner and form to be prescribed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to whom they shall make reports from time to time as may be by rule issued by the director required. The necessary blanks and blank records shall be furnished to such officers by the said director. Licensing officers shall be subject to removal for cause by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, and all licenses issued by them shall be subject to revocation by the director as provided in section 11.

"Sec. 13. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint in each State and in Alaska an explosives inspector, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to see that this act is faithfully executed and observed. Each such inspector shall receive a salary of $2,400 per annum. He may at any time be detailed for service by said director in the District of Columbia or in any State, Territory, or dependency of the United States. All additional employees required in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be appointed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"Sec. 14. That it shall be unlawful for any person to represent himself as having a license issued under this act, when he has not such a license, or as having a license different in form or in conditions from the one which he in fact has, or without proper authority make, cause to be made, issue or exhibit anything purporting or pretending to be such license, or intended to mislead any person into believing it is such a license, or to refuse to exhibit his license to any peace officer, Federal or State, or representative of the Bureau of Mines.

"Sec. 15. That no inspector or other employee of the Bureau of Mines shall divulge any information obtained in the course of his duties under this act regarding the business of any licensee, or applicant for license, without authority from the applicant for license or from the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

"Sec. 16. That every person authorized under this act to manufacture or store explosives or ingredients shall clearly mark and define the premises on which his plant or magazine may be and shall conspicuously display thereon the words 'Explosives—Keep Off.'

"Sec. 17. That no person, without the consent of the owner or his authorized agents, except peace officers, the Director of the Bureau of Mines and persons designated by him in writing, shall be in or upon any plant or premises on which explosives are manufactured or stored, or be in or upon any magazine premises on which explosives are stored; nor shall any person discharge any firearms or throw or place any explosives or inflammable bombs at, on, or against any such plant or magazine premises, or cause the same to be done.

"Sec. 18. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying into effect this act, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"Sec. 19. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act, or any rules or regulations made thereunder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"Sec. 20. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to investigate all explosions and fires which may occur in mines, quarries, factories, warehouses, magazines, houses, cars, boats, conveyances, and all places in which explosives or the ingredients thereof are manufactured, transported, stored, or used, and shall, in his discretion, report his findings, in such manner as he may deem fit, to the proper Federal or State authorities, to the end that if such explosion has been brought about by a willful act the person or person causing such act may be proceeded against and brought to justice; or, if said explosion has been brought about by accidental means, that precautions may be taken to prevent similar accidents from occurring. In the prosecution of such investigations the employees of the Bureau of Mines are hereby granted the authority to enter the premises where such explosion or fire has occurred, to examine plans, books, and papers, to administer oaths to, and to examine all witnesses and persons concerned, without let or hindrance on the part of the owner, lessee, operator, or agent thereof.

"Sec. 21. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines, with the approval of the President is hereby authorized to utilize such agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States, Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof, and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States and Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof, and the District of Columbia, shall hereby have full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this act when acting by the direction of the Bureau of Mines.

"Sec. 22. That for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and including supplies, equipment, expenses of traveling and subsistence, and for the purchase and hire of animal-draw or motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and upkeep of same, and for every other expense incident to the enforcement of the provisions of this act, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 shall be expended in the purchase of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, after full and free conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 3932, to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, submit the following in explanation of the changes agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the conference report.

On amendment No. 1: The Senate added the words "except as in this act provided." The House recedes and agrees to the same.

On amendment No. 2: The Senate struck out sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 and inserted new language. The House agrees to this amendment with the following amendments:

Strike out all of section 4 and insert the following language in lieu thereof: "That the word 'persons,' when used herein, shall include States, Territories, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and other dependencies of the United States, and municipal subdivisions thereof, individual citizens, firms, associations, societies, and corporations of the United States and of other countries at peace with the United States."

Section 5: Strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "forty." In the same section, after the word "act," just preceding the proviso, insert the following proviso: "Provided, That the purchase or possession of said ingredients when purchased or held in small quantities and not used or intended to be used in the manufacture of explosives." After the word "Provided" insert the word "further." In the same section after the word "issue" strike out the words "at the beginning of a shift." In the same section after the word "duties," where it first appears, strike out the words "for that shift only." After the word "return" strike out the words "at the end of the shift." At the end of the section strike out the words "for that shift."

Section 7: Strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "forty."

Section 9: Strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "forty."

Section 11: After the word "the," and before the word "nation," insert the words "subject or citizens of." In the same section, strike out the words "the citizens" and insert the word "to."

Section 12: Strike out the words "or organization."

After the word "used" and before the word "having" insert the word "and."

After the word "oaths" insert a comma. Strike out the figures "50" and insert the figures "25."

Section 13: Strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

At the end of the section, after the word "Mines," strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following words: "subject to the approval of the Secretary of Interior."

Section 17: After the word "and" and before the word "designated" insert the word "persons."

Strike out the words "employees thereof" and insert the words "by him in writing."

Section 18: After the word "act" strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the words "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Section 20: Strike out the words "or which since the commencement of the present war have occurred."

Section 21: After the word "Mines," in first line, insert the words "with the approval of the President."

Section 22: After the word "vehicles" strike out the words "and boats."

Strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "3," so as to read "$300,000."

M. D. FOSTER,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
E. E. DENISON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not intend to explain the conference report, will he yield me 10 minutes of time?

Mr. FOSTER. In just a minute. I want to state, Mr. Speaker, that the House provided the President should promulgate the regulations and make them in effect after so many days. The Senate struck out those provisions and wrote into this law these regulations providing for licenses and under what conditions the licenses should be issued and to what persons. They struck out of the House bill sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 and inserted new matter which was different from the House provisions, except in one or two particulars, which are practically the same as the House bill. The House conferees in going over the bill found that there were some provisions in the Senate amendment that would not be applicable, especially in coal-mining districts. That is, it provided that there should be issued the necessary explosive for one shift only. Those who are acquainted with the coal-mining industry of course know that a miner purchases and takes into the mine a keg of powder at a time, and that under State law it is required to be locked up in a secure place and kept there until the whole amount is used, and that you could not carry powder in and out of the coal mines each day or for that particular shift. I understand from metal men that that would not be so difficult to arrange. So the conferees struck out of the Senate amendment the provisions as to these shifts and only requires the superintendent of the mines to see that none of that explosive is removed from the mines.

The Senate provided that there should be a mining inspector in each State, and that the President should appoint him. The conferees on the part of the House believe that it might not be necessary that there should be an explosives director appointed in every State, and so changed the words to "may" instead of "shall," so that he may appoint one, in his judgment, if necessary, and would leave it to the President how many he would appoint; but otherwise he would not do it.

Now, these are the principal changes that have been made in the bill. The Senate provided for an appropriation of $400,000. The House conferees believed that $300,000 was sufficient to carry on this work. Both bills provided that, with the approval of the President and the Secretary of the Interior, all the Federal and State agencies might be utilized in this work, such as the mining inspectors and superintendent of mines, wherever it might be necessary.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the right of homesteaders in the timbered sections of our country to keep a supply of explosives on hand has been safeguarded in this bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I think so. It provides a safeguard for public use, and the only thing they would have to do would be to secure a license to handle those explosives.

Mr. KNUTSON. They are allowed under this bill to keep it on hand?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. The print of the bill containing the Senate amendment, under section 10, subdivision (d), reads as follows:

Foreman's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients, and the sale and issuance of explosives and ingredients to workmen under the proviso to section 4 above.

It is not very clear to my mind. Section 4 above as agreed on reads:

That the words "person" or "citizen of the United States of America" and the personal pronouns, when used herein, shall include States and other governmental entities and the municipal subdivisions thereof, individuals, firms, associations, societies, corporations, and all other bodies carrying on business in the United States, its Territories and dependencies.

There is no proviso to that section. Now, to what does this subdivision which I first read apply? It occurred to me that the number of that section was in error.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think so. I think possibly that may be a mistake.

Mr. HAMLIN. Possibly it meant to say "in accordance with the 'provisions' of the section."

Mr. FOSTER. That may be what it meant to say.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yet I hardly see how the matter treated of in subdivision (d) of section 10 applies to section 4 at all. I hardly see the connection.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that it may be a typographical error, if at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was inclined to think that it ought to be "provision," but it does not read well as it is.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I do not think it does, if it reads that way.

Mr. HAMLIN. Has the gentleman the original notes?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not have them here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me some time while examining that, or does he wish to hold the floor?

Mr. FOSTER. I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman. In the meantime I will examine to see if any mistake has been made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House as agreed to in conference has not heretofore been considered by this House. The bill as it passed the House was a regulatory measure, vesting in the President the authority to control the manufacture and the storage of explosives. It carried no appropriation. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate brought back a bill providing for an elaborate method of licensing, which had not been considered by the House at all. When consent was asked by the gentleman from Illinois to send this bill to conference, I asked him whether he agreed with the Senate provision, and he stated positively that he did not, but that he believed the House bill was far superior. At that time I did not approve of the Senate provisions, but we have them now before us for approval.

It is difficult for me to ascertain what is the real purpose of this supervisory inspection and of the machinery for its enforcement which is provided by this bill, involving an expenditure of $300,000, and providing for an inspector of explosives in every State at a salary of $2,400.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not just at this minute. Small-arms and shotgun cartridges are excepted from the provisions of this bill. If the purpose of the bill is to supervise the manufacture of explosives, that is one thing. But when they go to the extent of requiring a license, as this bill provides, for the manufacturer, for the vendor, for the purchaser, for the foreman, for the exporter, for the importer of explosives, and of all ingredients involved in the manufacture of explosives, I think they are going to an extent that has been unheard of in any of the supervisory legislation of this Congress. Let me just read to the House—because it has not been read or considered at any time by this House—what this law does.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a moment, after I get through with my preliminary statement. I read:

SEC. 10. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to issue licenses as follows:

(a) Manufacturer's license, authorizing the manufacture, possession, and sale of explosives and ingredients.

(b) Vendor's license, authorizing the purchase, possession, and sale of explosives or ingredients.

(c) Purchaser's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients.

(d) Foreman's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients, and the sale and issuance of explosives and ingredients to workmen under the proviso to section 4 above.

(e) Exporter's license, authorizing the licensee to export explosives, but no such license shall authorize exportation in violation of any proclamation of the President issued under any act of Congress.

(f) Importer's license, authorizing the licensee to import explosives.

(g) Analyst's, educator's, inventor's, and investigator's licenses, authorizing the purchase, manufacture, possession, testing, and disposal of explosives and ingredients.

Why, gentlemen, under the licenses authorized and required under this new Senate bill that is under consideration here, every druggist in the country, every person who has in his possession any ingredient that goes into the manufacture of explosives, will be required to obtain a license. And for what? For the protection and safety in the manufacture of explosives? I do not think that anyone contends that that is the purpose. For protection and security in the transportation of explosives? There is a provision in this bill that especially exempts the provisions of this bill from the carriage of explosives in interstate commerce. For the prevention of the transportation of powder abroad? No one will contend that there is any chance whatever, under the embargoes now established, that there will be any possibility of any powder being sent to any foreign foe.

What is the purpose? At no time during the consideration of this bill has the purpose of creating this elaborate machinery, involving an expense of $300,000, been explained to this House; not in any instance.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who first asked me to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], my colleague, a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield for that.

Mr. MADDEN. It is in connection with the statement that the gentleman made.

Mr. STAFFORD. My time is limited. Of course if I can get additional time, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. It is right in line with the statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood my colleague, when he was explaining the bill, to say that the Senate bill provided for the appointment of an inspector in each State, but that the report of the conferees cut that out, and made a general inspector.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. The gentleman said the Senate provision was mandatory, compelling the President to appoint one of these $2,400 inspectors in each State, and the conferees inserted the word "may."

Mr. MADDEN. That is mandatory, too.

Mr. FOSTER. The conferees thought by changing the word there that the President would be left free to exercise his discretion.

Mr. MADDEN. All the executive officers of the Government construe the word "may" to mean the word "shall."

Mr. STAFFORD. That was before it was changed.

Mr. MADDEN. That assumes that they knew if it were changed it would not give any patronage.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the provision authorizing the Commissioner of Mines to investigate explosions and fires, there can be no objection to that feature. But as to the great army of employees provided for, involving the establishment of a vast artificial system of patronage and licenses, so that you can not go into the manufacture or the sale or any disposition of any of these ingredients that go into the composition of explosives without first obtaining a license, as I said a moment ago, requiring a druggist to take out a license before he is permitted to handle one of these ingredients—that is going to an extreme that I think is unheard of and not warranted by any existing condition of affairs.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have a few minutes more. I was interrupted.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Does not the gentleman know that you can go into any drug store in this town and get the ingredients for a dollar or two that can be made into a mixture that will blow up this Capitol?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know that that is true.

Mr. BATHRICK. That is true. I can tell you how to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the gentleman is an expert on it, and—

Mr. BATHRICK. No; I am not; but I can show you that the proposition is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not see any need of requiring a license—requiring druggists and all the others to take out a license. After taking out the license there is no restriction whatever in the use of it. It is clearly cumbersome and needless restraint. It is merely, in my opinion, wasting a large sum of money by employing a large number of unnecessary officials and employees to be attached to the Bureau of Mines. Three hundred thousand dollars is not considered much these days, when you are voting billions of dollars; but this bill, since it was brought into this House, which I thought was largely the result of the explosions in Jersey City, so as to give the National Government some authority to control and supervise the shipment and the care in shipment of high explosives, has been changed so as to alter its entire character.

Now, the gentleman's attention has been called by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] to some grammatical errors that require some change. I direct the gentleman's attention to some other matters that I would like to have his opinion on.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman called attention to the proviso and said that it should be in section 5 instead of section 4.

Mr. STAFFORD. I call the attention of the House to this first proviso in section 5. I have read it and reread it and read it again, and still it seems not to be a complete sentence.

That is the proviso that was inserted by the conferees.

Section 5 reads as follows:

Sec. 5. That from and after 40 days after the passage and approval of this act no person shall have in his possession or purchase, accept, receive, sell, give, barter, or otherwise dispose of or procure explosives, or ingredients, except as provided in this act: Provided, That the purchase or possession of said ingredients when purchased or held in small quantities and not used or intended to be used in the manufacture of explosives.

It is not a complete thought. There is no complete sentence there.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to my colleague, to explain what is really meant by that proviso that the conferees inserted.

Mr. DENISON. I will answer the gentleman's question. That proviso is not complete, but it is to be completed by a concurrent resolution, for which consideration will be asked immediately. This conference report has already been agreed to by the Senate. We discovered that error, which is an error of the printer, after the conference report had been agreed to in the Senate, and we concluded that the best way to correct it would be to bring in a concurrent resolution, which is now ready to be presented, adding to the proviso the words "is not hereby prohibited."

Mr. STAFFORD. That is to be added at the end of the proviso?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. A bare reading of it shows that the sentence was not complete.

Mr. DENISON. It was discovered after the conference report had been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with certain of the Senate amendments that show the need of the Government throwing a protecting arm around the manufacture and storage of explosives; but when, as I have pointed out, they go to the extreme in requiring licenses from every conceivable person who handles not only explosives, but in requiring educators, investigators, and others who have in their possession any ingredients that may enter into its composition, to take out a license, I think that is launching into a degree of paternalism that can not be justified, even under existing conditions. This legislation is based upon an expectant fear that has no confirmation in reality, where the inconvenience occasioned to the public far outbalances the little security afforded by this cumbersome machinery of licenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] takes an extreme view of this matter and would lead the House to believe that we are going to cause people a great deal of annoyance and inconvenience. We are trying to cause trouble to some people who may have these explosives in their possession for an illegal purpose, and we want to know also the people who have in their possession the ingredients for the making of explosives for the purpose of taking them out to do criminal work in this country during this war. That is what we are trying to get at. If it means that the druggists in the town in which we live must have a license, and know to whom they are selling certain ingredients by which men who know how to make explosives and then go and blow up a railroad bridge or some building, we want to know that those druggists are loyal enough to take out licenses that will protect the people. That is what we are trying to do, to secure if possible a knowledge of where these explosives are manufactured, and to trace them from the place where they are manufactured to the man who uses them. That is what we are trying to get at, and we are trying to make this stringent, but not to annoy people, but to secure protection. The omission in the proviso to which the gentleman from Wisconsin has referred was discovered after the conference report had gone through the Senate, and the committee will ask this House to correct that. It is not to annoy people who want to get some of these ingredients that are necessary for domestic purposes. We are trying to avoid any inconvenience of that sort. We are trying to avoid the inconvenience that might come to the miners who must use explosives every working day in the year. We are trying to take care of the farmers of the country who have use for dynamite. It is well known how easy it is to secure nitroglycerin from dynamite, and that a man can take it in his pocket and go out and blow up some factory or mine, or do damage to some other property. The purpose of this legislation is to keep track of these explosives and to ask men during the time of war to put themselves to a little trouble for the protection of the country. I believe that all these people will do it. I believe our people are willing to do it to protect this country from those who would commit criminal acts by causing explosions that would destroy life and property during time of war.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question with reference to section 5. I come from a mining district. That section is going to impose an entirely new line of duty upon the superintendents and foremen and men employed in coal mines. For instance, it requires that the superintendents, if they are licensed, shall sell explosives to the miners, and it imposes on them the duty of checking up the miner to see, first, that he takes the explosive to the proper place in the mine, and, second, that after he has worked all day he returns any explosive that he has not used.

Mr. FOSTER. He is required to do that under the State law now, and he does it now. They are willing to do it. There are no superintendents of mines offering any objection whatever to this bill. No miners have offered any objection to this bill. The representatives of the miners came before the committee and said, "We gladly comply with this law." They said they thought it should go upon the statute books, not only for the protection of property, but for their own protection and the lives of the men who work in the mines; that they ought to be protected against men, if there are any, who would blow up the mines and probably kill many people in them. The miner is honest, but some evil-designed man may be in the mines, and if there are such, the miner wants to get rid of him, too.

Let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS] that in the State of Wisconsin, in the zinc mines, they found one miner carrying dynamite out in his bucket every night, and when they went to search his house they found a valise full of dynamite that he was collecting there. It is to try to stop such things as that. We do not know what may happen. In the community in which I live there is a large oil production. They make the nitroglycerin out in the field, as you no doubt know—manufacture it there to be used in what we call "shooting" wells. This summer a thousand quarts of this explosive were stolen at one of these places and no trace of it has ever been found. It is to try, if possible, to make the manufacture, storage, and use of these explosives as safe as possible that this legislation is presented. We can not stop all illegal use of explosives, but we want to reduce it to a minimum.

Mr. BLAND. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the State law of Indiana required the miner to return what powder he did not use back to the superintendent?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I said there was a law in some of the States that required the safe-keeping of the unused portion of the explosive, and I take it that the people of Indiana are intelligent.

Mr. BLAND. They are intelligent, but we have not that law.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a law in many States which requires superintendents to see that explosives left over in the mines are made safe.

Mr. BLAND. But this would require him to return the powder he does not use. We have no such law in Indiana, and this will be a new law. There is no law there which requires him to lock up the powder.

Mr. FOSTER. There ought to be.

Mr. BLAND. This will be a new law for the miner.

Mr. FOSTER. I think in times like these we ought to pass just such a bill so that we may control, as far as possible, these explosives. It is not going to interfere with the miner. All the superintendent does is to see that the explosives are not taken out of the mine. My colleague [Mr. DENISON], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo], a member of the committee, and myself, all live in coal-mining countries. We have consulted these men, and they say that it will not interfere with their work.

Mr. BLAND. I notice that it says any unused explosives shall be returned. The powder which the miner purchases he owns himself, and will that be returned to the boss?

Mr. FOSTER. That does not mean at the end of each shift. We have stricken that provision out.

Mr. BLAND. It does not show in section 5 that it is stricken out.

Mr. FOSTER. A provision was in the bill originally that it was to be returned at the end of each shift, but we struck that out.

Mr. BLAND. When is it to be returned?

Mr. FOSTER. If he is going to quit work he must take care of it where it will not be carried out of the mine. That does not mean when he quits his day's work, but if he goes out of the mine to stay out, we expect the explosives to be returned.

Mr. BLAND. Suppose he is only out for a day or two.

Mr. FOSTER. Then that will not interfere. I think my friend will find that this is all right. I will now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in times like these it is highly important that such action be taken as may be necessary to control the manufacture, use, and distribution of explosives. But we must judge as to what action may be necessary by what has occurred and what is likely to occur. We have reason for congratulation that while we have been in war for almost six months, there have been comparatively few attempts anywhere in the country to destroy life or property through the use of explosives; whatever legislation may be deemed necessary in the making and use of explosives is such as would seem to be called for by the situation and conditions as we find them.

The bill as introduced provided that the President should formulate such rules as in his opinion were wise and necessary to protect the people of the country, to protect the property of the country, against those who might seek to use explosives in an unlawful way. That was proper legislation and we all approved of it. But the committee comes before us with a bill which requires every mine operator and mine foreman, every manufacturer, every seller, every user of explosives, to secure a Federal license; providing expensive machinery for carrying out this work of licensing under regulations of the bureau, providing for a large number of public officials at a cost of somewhere in the neighborhood of half a million dollars at least. In my opinion the legislation is unnecessary and uncalled for by any condition that exists or is likely to exist. I suppose the committee did not intend to allow any unlawful thing to be done under the provisions of the bill, but I call attention to the fact that the first section of the bill would seem to indicate they did so intend. In the first section it provides that it shall be unlawful to manufacture, distribute, store, use, or possess powder, explosives, blasting supplies, or ingredients in such a manner as is detrimental to the public safety, except as provided in this act. I do not suppose that the committee intended that things detrimental to the public safety could be done or performed under the provisions of this act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The original bill provided for regulations by the President which could be made practicable. I see that a purchaser's license is required to purchase anything in the nature of explosives. Would that apply to every farmer who wanted to blow up a tree?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and every farmer's boy that wants to shoot a chipmunk and who buys powder and shot because they are cheaper than cartridges will have to get a license from the bureau in order to secure his powder. Certainly that will be required if the provisions of the bill are adhered to. It will necessitate the securing by every farmer of a license who wants to blow up a stump on his farm. The use of blasting powder in agricultural development is widespread. Powder is being used for blowing up stumps and breaking rocky soil, for preparing land for many classes of agricultural crops, and under this bill every man desiring to use powder for that purpose would be required to make a record of his desire and get a license. There have been no explosions in this country coming from these sources, and there are likely to be none. Therefore, it is altogether unnecessary and altogether unwise and superfluous to provide by legislation for the licensing of that sort of thing.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman made a statement that if a farmer wished to blow up a stump he had to get a license. Surely the gentleman has not read the bill, and he does not want that misstatement of fact to go into the Record?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is what he would have to do; that is what it would amount to, a license is required for the purchaser or the user. Take the matter of coal mining. In every coal mine in the country there are mine bosses who control the use of explosives in the mines. Under this law it would be necessary within a very brief period, a time so brief that it will be practically impossible to provide for it, for all of the operators and all of the bosses and users of explosives in the mines to secure these permits and to operate under them. I have not heard that the miners of the country were trying to use the explosives they require in their work for unlawful purposes; therefore in my opinion the legislation is viewed as unnecessary. The offering of this legislation for a vexatious and expensive license system would seem to indicate that we are disturbed, alarmed, fearful, relative to a condition that does not exist, and that we are willing to put our people to an enormous amount of vexation and trouble because of something we fear without reason, something that is not liable or probable to occur. Is it not about time we ceased legislating in a spirit of panic and subjecting our people to unnecessary and vexatious interference in the conduct of their affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD). The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it was introduced and passed in the House made the possession, manufacture, or transfer of explosives illegal, except under such regulations as should be provided by the President. That left all of the regulations governing the handling of explosives and ingredients of explosives to be promulgated by the Bureau of Mines under direction of the President. I mention this in answer to what was said by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The Senate bill, which we have practically adopted, instead of leaving the President to promulgate regulations and thereby in a way make law, incorporates into the law itself the regulations which the Bureau of Mines intended to issue. In other words, the Senate committee, when they began to consider the bill, obtained from the Bureau of Mines the regulations that they intended to promulgate under the direction of the President and embodied them in the bill, thereby making it a matter of statutory law rather than a matter of regulations by the President or the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. What was the idea? To make the Congress responsible for rules and regulations that might be onerous and burdensome, which the people might resent?

Mr. DENISON. No; the purpose was this—

Mr. MONDELL. As long as the President had authority to do these things, why not let him do them and modify the rules if it should develop in their enforcement that they were unnecessary?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, there was some question in the minds of the members of the committee as to whether or not we had authority to delegate our power to the President.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman: If we can do what is proposed in this bill under the war power, if we can take over control over the use of explosives even down to the farmer's boy who buys a pound of powder, there can be no question about our power to delegate our authority to the President.

Mr. FOSTER. Do we not take control over the use of morphine and other opiates and poisons down to the man who wants to use them?

Mr. MONDELL. That is quite a different proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman first complains that we give the President too much power and now that we do not give him enough.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman misunderstands me. I was suggesting that if we can assume the authority provided for in this bill directly, we certainly can confer the power upon the President.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, the committee concluded it would be better for Congress itself to provide the regulations rather than to leave them to the Bureau of Mines. In other words, the people would learn the law better and more quickly if these things were embodied in the law itself rather than if they were left to regulations to be issued by one of the departments.

So far as I am personally concerned I am in favor of Congress itself enacting the law, where such penalties are provided, rather than leaving it to one of the executive departments of the Government to issue the law in the form of regulations. I think it is better that the people may know from the law itself what the law is.

The primary purpose of this law is to prevent explosives or ingredients of explosives from coming into the possession of evil-minded persons who want to use them for unlawful purposes. If that results in any inconvenience to those who are not evil-minded, it is one of the inconveniences which we have to submit to in time of war. It will result in some inconvenience of course, but how else can we reach the evil-minded men of the country? I think it is far better, in a time like this, that many right-minded and patriotic people should suffer some inconvenience than that a few of evil purpose should be allowed to freely obtain possession of an agency that could be used for destruction that might bring such disastrous results. It is hoped that this bill will not seriously embarrass or inconvenience anyone in the legitimate use of explosives. Certainly it is not intended to do so. And I do not think it will, if it is reasonably and properly enforced. An exception to its provisions is provided for coal miners who obtain powder or other high explosives for blasting in mines. We have intended to make the law broad enough to conform to the provisions of the State laws governing the handling of explosives in coal mines. I would not approve of the bill if I thought it could not be enforced without unreasonable interference with the proper use of powder for blasting in coal mines. But the Chief of the Bureau of Mines and other representatives of the executive department of the Government have come before the committee and urged the importance and necessity of enacting a law of this kind. And this bill represents the best judgment of the committees of the House and Senate in response to their urgent recommendation.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I can not see my way clear to fail to support any reasonable law that proposes to regulate the manufacture and use of explosives. I regard this as an important question at this time. Sometimes in these regulatory laws there are some very harmful things, and I fear if this law be not properly executed there may be some harm come from it.

The chairman of this great committee, whose attention I have at this time, tells me that there will be no inconvenience to the many coal miners of the country who buy powder and keep it in their rooms in the mines. Now, if the law is properly regulated, this will be true; but by immature, ill-considered action on the part of the Bureau of Mines some injustice may be done this great class of men, and I want to say to you now that the United Mine Workers of America is as patriotic a bunch of men as ever lived, and they do not need to have any special watch over them; but, as has been said by the gentleman from Illinois here, who is on the committee, sometimes you have to regulate the innocent and the good in order to catch the vicious, and I am willing for my men to stand a little of the rigors of regulation for the general good of the country in this time of war. We passed a food bill some time ago and amended it and made it so that we could control and regulate fuel. I believe that fuel ought to be regulated. I thought there might come a time when it might be necessary, but I want to say to you now that ill-advised action on the part of the administration in regulating fuel is about to cause a coal famine in this country, and you men will find it will have been caused by the middle of January next, and those in charge are realizing it to-day, because they have destroyed one of the most powerful incentives for an increased production of coal and to-day you are hearing from the whole Nation that they are in danger from suffering from the cold by the middle of winter. Now, it is all right to regulate fuel, but when you regulate it without investigation, when you regulate it without consideration, when you regulate it against the advice of men who know, you may expect the most woeful consequences, and that is exactly what has happened in the coal industry. I will not stand here and say I am not willing to have a product of my district regulated.

I want to help win this war, and I have voted for regulation, but I do want to protest against ill-advised regulation by those to whom we have delegated the power. Now, this is another bill to regulate, and I am proposing to support it, and support it when I know it will bring under its rules the men of my district whom I have every reason to believe are absolutely patriotic and loyal. Now, if the use and manufacture of explosives are regulated properly, it will not hurt them, and I am trusting to the words of the chairman of this committee that the regulation authorized by this bill will not bring inconvenience or harm to them.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman just referred to some effects of regulation?

Mr. BLAND. Indeed.

Mr. MONDELL. Do they incline the gentleman to favor still further regulation?

Mr. BLAND. Because there has been an indiscretion committed by the administration in one act, this will not cause me to vote against what I believe to be for the best interests of my country. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD) announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 309, noes 3.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 86, noes 3.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OF REQUIREMENTS ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 78.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado calls up a conference report on the Senate joint resolution the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 20 days of labor, in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report; it is very short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 171).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 20 days of labor, in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following: "years 1917 and 1918: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this resolution shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded on or before December 31, of each of the years 1917 and 1918, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this resolution: Provided further, That this resolution shall not apply to oil-placer locations or claims."

On page 2, of the bill, strike out all of lines 19 and 20 and insert: "This resolution shall not be deemed to amend or repeal the public resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service,' approved July 17, 1917."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment to the title: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918." And the House agree to the same.

M. D. FOSTER,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
E. E. DENISON,

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution 78, "To suspend during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who in lieu of such assessment work expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100," submit the following statement in relation to the action agreed upon by the conference committee as to the amendments of the House:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment merely inserts the word "the," and was for the purpose of grammatical accuracy. The Senate accepted this amendment.

On amendment No. 2: The form of the resolution as it passed the Senate provided for the suspension of annual assessment work upon all mining claims during the period of the war with Germany. That provision as amended and passed by the House limited the time to the year 1917. Your conferees compromised on the time limit of the bill and made it apply to the years 1917 and 1918 only.

The House amendment also struck out the provision of the Senate bill requiring affidavits by mining claimants, showing that $100 worth of work had been expended each year in manufacturing or some other beneficial occupation. The Senate conferees accepted this provision.

The House inserted an amendment exempting oil-placer locations or claims from the operation of this resolution. The Senate conferees accepted that amendment.

The Senate conferees receded and agreed to the title as amended by the House by adding the words "nineteen hundred and eighteen."

The only other change was the one agreed upon by the conferees, which more definitely describes the resolution referred to as Senate joint resolution 35.

MARTIN D. FOSTER,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
E. E. DENISON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will yield for a question, certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Colorado state whether the effect of this measure as now agreed upon in conference is such as to make unnecessary any further legislation during the year 1918 to relieve these claimants from doing their assessment work during that year?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir; that is the compromise that the conferees have agreed upon. The gentleman will remember that the way the Senate passed the bill it suspended all annual assessment work on mining claims during the war with Germany. The way the bill passed through the House the other day we limited it to this year only. The conferees compromised by including next year, making it apply to the years 1917 and 1918.

Mr. WALSH. Did not the bill, as it passed the House, require an affidavit to be filed during 1917? The suspension was during the war with Germany but they had to file their affidavits before December 31 of this year. Now, the way it comes from the conferees it will permit them to file an affidavit during either year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The way the bill passed the Senate required the affidavit to be filed on or before the 31st day of December of each year of the period of the war, and the affidavit was required to make quite a full showing. We retain the provision and require the affidavit to be made each year for two years. But we do not require proof of other work or expenditure or payment like the Senate bill required. The other change was merely a provision of the Senate which the House struck out, and which the conferees accepted. Practically speaking, the Senate receded and accepted the House amendments with the one additional amendment extending the bill to include 1918.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the conferees felt that it was necessary to compromise so as to relieve mining claims from assessment work in the year 1918. I think all those who come from mining States realize the very great importance of keeping the work of development going, and we should only relieve from the necessity of doing the work required by law when conditions are such as to make it absolutely essential that that be done.

It is not in the interest of the country generally, of the people generally, or of any region, to have mining development suspended; to have men hold claims indefinitely while doing nothing on them. It simply leads to speculation. Under the bill as it now stands, a mining claim located this year would be relieved from assessment work next year, would it not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; but he would not be relieved from doing the necessary location work of 10 feet on each claim this year.

Mr. MONDELL. No; but he would be relieved of assessment work next year. It delays development. It allows men to hold land in large areas and do nothing that will tend to develop it. We have done that properly for this year, I think. I think it was entirely proper for the House to relieve from the necessity of doing assessment work this year, but we do not know what the conditions may be next year. There may be conditions under which it may be to the interest of all the people to have mining development expedited and hurried along. In the face of that situation, it is unwise now to legislate in regard to this important matter for next year. We could very well have met that situation when the time came.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, my information is entirely different from that of my friend from Wyoming. I think nearly every other Member of this House from the Western States has had urgent appeals for this legislation, and there was great disappointment because the House limited the provisions of the bill to the year 1917 instead of adopting the Senate provision and extending it to the period of the war. Mining men say it is utterly impossible to obtain labor to perform this actual assessment work, and inasmuch as this year is nearly past, and assessment work for this year is now in many localities very largely done, they insist that it was of tremendous importance that we provide in this bill for next year, so that they may know what they can depend upon. As I said at the time of the passage of this bill, about 90 per cent of the annual assessment work done on mining locations, "prospect holes," is practically dead work, and for that reason, and because of the great scarcity of labor, and the high cost of materials and everything, we felt warranted in compromising with the Senate.

Let me say to the House that for one I am glad to have introduced this bill as H. R. 5081 practically in the exact form in which we have passed it. It was a personal gratification to have reported it from the committee to the House, and I am supremely proud to see this measure now adopted and become a law. I feel that this legislation will be of more direct benefit to the prospectors, and that they are more entitled to this consideration than anyone else.

If there is any class of men in this country that is entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress, it is the metalliferous mining prospector—the man who goes out and pursues year in and year out the desperately hard and lonesome task, and usually forlorn hope, of trying to find a mine.

There have been volumes written upon the life of the hardy prospectors of the West—the men whose bones have bleached upon every trail of the Rocky Mountains. I wish I had time and ability to pay a just tribute to their memory. One of the last acts of the martyred and immortal Abraham Lincoln, whose memory we all love and revere, was to send a message to the hardy pioneer miners of the Rocky Mountains, bidding them Godspeed, and assuring them protection in the development of the mineral resources of the West. Prospecting is not quite as hard and heartbreaking to-day as it was 36 years ago last spring, when I went to Leadville, Colo. But it is still hard and discouraging, with very few rewards.

I notice in the issue of September 25 of the Leadville Herald-Democrat that I just received a little article upon this subject, and I am going to take the liberty of inserting it as a part of my remarks, as follows:

PAYS TRIBUTE TO PROSPECTOR—CHARLES J. SENTER, HIMSELF FOR YEARS A DWELLER IN THE MOUNTAINS, TELLS OF HIS LIFE AND AMBITIONS.

Charles J. Senter, one of the pioneer prospectors of the Kokomo-Robinson district, is proud of his calling, and points to a long period of years during which he has sought out the hiding places of mineral wealth. Nearly 20 years ago he wrote a tribute to the prospector which was published in Moore's Once a Week, a Denver publication, as follows:

"The prospector, laughing at the tenderfoot's cry of impossibilities, loads up his faithful burro with a few of the actual wants of camp life, and with picks, powder, hammers, and drills starts forth like a mighty magician into uninhabited regions of the mountains determined to create wealth both for himself and others, with these words, 'Never give up,' always foremost in his mind, and, with eyes of an eagle, scans every rock formation, the granites and quartzites, the carboniferous and silurian lime ledges, and the eruptive porphyry dikes, not a seam or crevice or mineralized vein escaping his eagle eye.

Oftentimes, when searching for the source of gold that fed the gulches, he will sink shafts and run drifts to bedrock, scrape the seams of the bedrock, and after days of hard work will carry the dirt from the crevices for miles to a stream of water and will pan and wash down so carefully that not even a tiny speck of gold as large as the point of a pin escapes him.

Then, again, when he finds a piece of mineralized float, what a feeling of hopeful happiness pervades his mind. With feelings excited to the very highest pitch of pure pleasure he starts on the search for the vein. What bright castles they are building for those they love! Sometimes disappointed for weeks and months and years, they struggle on, often climbing to the highest peaks on the mountains, crossing and recrossing vast hills of slide rock; and when he finds the vein or deposit of mineral his bright castles become for the present time realities. Their muscles work like throbbing bunches of steel. They work ten times harder than ever. They trip lightly to their campfire, cook supper, and lie down on pine-branch beds, with no one for their companions but mountain lions, lynx, foxes, Rocky Mountain coonies, and their faithful pets, the camp birds and burros.

They know no fear and fall into sweet, restful sleep and dream of barren mountains teeming with life and activity. Men with bright, happy faces surround them and congratulate them on their good fortune; they see a city spring up as if by magic in the picturesque valley below them, and they see their wives and children in good comfortable homes with everything they wish for around them. They wake up and look at the stars; the morning star tells them that it is nearly 4 o'clock—their watches may have been sold to help buy their outfit. They spring out of bed, stir up the camp fire, cook their breakfast, and believe that daybreak comes very slowly, so impatient are they to start their day's work.

They go to their mine, believing that they are the happiest and most fortunate men on earth. They choose the place for their shots, and while they are drilling the holes, hum some familiar tune of happy childhood, thinking their shots will open another bonanza as rich as the Comstock. The shots are fired and they can hardly wait for the smoke to clear away. They jump down the shaft or incline or run into the tunnel trembling as with a chill. They have struck a pinch or a horse in the vein; bright castles fade away, but it is only for a few moments, for the old spirit of determination comes back to them.

Without friends or money, no supply of powder, and only a camp outfit, they still cling to the hope that by a little more development work they will have a pay mine. They examine the breast of the tunnel, the bottom and the sides of the shaft, and may find a seam or stringer no thicker than a knife blade. If there is a horse in the vein, the tunnel breast or bottom of the shaft will look as barren as their hands. They must have help to push the work. They gather the ore, sort it, and start for the nearest mining camp or settlement. If they are known as lucky prospectors they may get someone interested without much trouble, but the chances are it will require much time and expenditure of their own money before they can find a man who will see the opportunity to lay the cornerstone of his own fortune by buying a controlling interest for a small consideration. The pinch out of the vein killed all their hopes.

Lift the veil, take away the rough exterior from the prospectors' lives, and you will find, as one of our great minds has said, "Lives jeweled with jewels of patriotism, perseverance, and hope." It is an ambitious life and holds within more of humanity, more true nobility of character and manliness than is concentrated inside the anatomies of all the autocrats of the world combined—those who grow indifferent by means of the prospector's toil and often laugh at their rugged but noble appearance.

Search the world over, where can we find a class of men who struggled harder, suffered more hardships, lived more honorably, died more nobly, than the true prospector of the Rocky Mountains?

Mr. Speaker, the resolution as agreed upon and in the exact form in which it will become a law is as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918.

Resolved, etc., That in order that labor may be most effectively used in raising and producing those things needed in the prosecution of the present war with Germany, that the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements to be made during each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended during the years 1917 and 1918: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this resolution shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded on or before December 31, of each of the years 1917 and 1918, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this resolution: Provided further, That this resolution shall not apply to oil placer locations or claims.

This resolution shall not be deemed to amend or repeal the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service," approved July 17, 1917.

I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from California, Mr. RAKER.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at my distinguished friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. He evidently has not been giving the question of mining assessment his close attention. The work on the mining claims for this year is not all done, possibly only one-fourth of it. So this bill will relieve the mining claimants for this year. For next year they will not have to prepare for assessment work, but will be able to devote their time and attention to some other enterprise or to go into actually productive mines, where they can work and assist in developing those and bringing forth the necessary metal that is needed. This does not retard the development of the country. If there are a few men so situated that they can go on with their claim work, they will do it. There are many who can not do it. There are many who, if this relief is not granted, will lose years of development, will lose years of their best time and the money they have put in their claims, because their help has been taken from them.

I have received a number of letters from my district stating that claimants' sons have gone to the war or have been drafted. Others have volunteered. They say it is impossible under the conditions to do the assessment work this year and even possibly next year, unless some relief is granted.

I am glad that the conferees on this bill have made it two years instead of one. In other words, that they have included 1918 as well as 1917. Those who file upon their claims now will not have to do any assessment work, because, under the law, during the year they file they do no assessment work, but must do it the year following, on or before the 31st of December of the following year. So that this bill will give the needed relief. It will give those who want to devote their time and attention to other important matters to do it and at the same time work no detriment to the country. This legislation is needed during the present war. If the war should continue in 1918, then the same relief can be given for future years as found necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman seems to differ from his friend from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] with regard to the present situation. He referred to the fact that I said that the assessment work was mostly done this year. It was the gentleman from Colorado who made that statement.

Mr. RAKER. That applies to the gentleman's territory in regard to the assessment work. In regard to the assessment work in my own territory, as I said before on the floor of the House, they do it in the latter part of the year. Therefore, this bill for this year is very necessary, and very important also for the year 1918.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the gentleman to say it was two years. And I understood the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] to say it was one year.

Mr. RAKER. This bill will relieve the assessment for the year 1917, and the conference report, to which the conferees have agreed, extends the provision of the act to 1918—making it two years—1917 and 1918.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. As the Senate passed this bill it provided that the claimant could be relieved of assessment work on condition that if he had paid into the Government, or expended certain moneys, or filed affidavits, he had done something for the Government.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but the House amendment relieves them of the actual assessment work on their claims for 1917. Now, the conference report extends to 1918 the same as provided for 1917.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. EVANS. Now, as I understand, this is a plain relief of that assessment work without any conditions?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. The House struck out that provision, and the Senate receded from it.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OVER HEADWATERS OF MOBILE BAY.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, on account of a variance between copies and the original of the bill a mistake was made yesterday in amending Senate bill 2813, to authorize the Gulf

Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.

I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings back to the amending stage in order that that amendment may be disagreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings of yesterday on the bill S. 2813, to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala., back to the amending stage, and that the bill be considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. ADAMSON. Answering a question just asked me by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], a copy of the bill was sent to the committee, which was acted on in lieu of the original Senate bill. The committee saw that an amendment was necessary, saying "at a point suitable to the interest of navigation," and included it, and sent the copy back to the House. I never looked at the original at all. It appears that in the original the Senate itself had made that amendment, so that it now appears twice. So I want to disagree to the House committee amendment. I have a copy here to show that the Senate bill did not originally contain that language, and therefore I recommended the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. We want to disagree to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to the bill S. 2813.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG RIVER, W. VA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is another bill to which the Senate disagreed to the House amendment and asked for a conference. It is the Senate bill 2663. I ask that we disagree to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked. Is there objection?

There was not objection; and the Speaker pro tempore announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. ESCH.

EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 13, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 13.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to insert after the word "explosives," in the first proviso of section 5 of the bill, as agreed to in conference, the words "are not subject to the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

CHAPLAINS AT LARGE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 2527, providing for chaplains at large in the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2527, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2527) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President alone may appoint for the period of the existing emergency not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army, 12 as representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now provided by law, and 8 for service in base hospitals, and such number of chaplains as he may determine to be necessary for service at training camps, cantonments, recruit depots, and in the National Army, selected from prominent clergy and ministers who have served at the front with the allied armies, but who have passed the age limit prescribed by law for appointment in the Regular Army.

With a committee amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause, on page 1 down to and including line 2, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the President may appoint for service during the present emergency not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now recognized by law.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is not the same bill, if we adopt the committee amendment, that the House passed recently?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. This is intended to add 20 more chaplains?

Mr. SIEGEL. No. It is the same bill. What the Senate did was to pass on Thursday, September 13, what is known as the second bill, introduced by me on August 17, but which our Military Committee did not favor. We passed our bill (H. R. 5271) on Tuesday, September 11. The Senate added to its bill some additional chaplains, which would have made more than 20. What the committee has done is to report back the Senate bill here, striking out what the Senate put in and inserting word for word what we put in on September 11.

Mr. WINGO. I understand that if we pass the bill as proposed by the committee amendment the President will be authorized to appoint 20 additional chaplains from religious sects other than those now recognized?

Mr. SIEGEL. Correct.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the object of the bill is to permit chaplains of the Jewish faith—

Mr. SIEGEL. And such other faiths as are not represented at the present time—

Mr. WINGO. Yes; to be appointed in the Army?

Mr. SIEGEL. That is correct.

Mr. WINGO. Is there any probability that those who are backing this legislation in the House will in conference agree to the Senate's original provision?

Mr. SIEGEL. I am not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, but their report is unanimous, recommending the passage of the bill which we passed here the last time, namely, my bill.

Mr. WINGO. I do not object. I think the Jewish faith should have been represented by chaplains long ago.

Mr. SIEGEL. I realize that and know that to be the gentleman's views.

Mr. WINGO. I think each man in the Army should have an opportunity to have religious administration in keeping with his own faith, without any restriction, and the Jews of course ought to be recognized the same as anybody else. If that is the purpose of this bill, I will not object.

Mr. SIEGEL. That is the purpose.

Mr. WINGO. The House passed its bill and the Senate passed its bill, and the two bills crossed. The object now is to amend the Senate bill to conform to the bill which the House passed the other day?

Mr. SIEGEL. That is correct. The report so shows.

Mr. WINGO. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If this bill passes, it will provide for 20 chaplains.

Mr. SIEGEL. Not exceeding 20.

Mr. CANNON. How many chaplains are there now authorized by law?

Mr. SIEGEL. There are none of the Jewish faith.

Mr. CANNON. Of other faiths?

Mr. SIEGEL. I could not tell you that. I know there are 36 per cent of the chaplains who are of the Catholic faith and 64 per cent who are of the Protestant faith.

Mr. CANNON. The chaplains of the Protestant faith are confined to three denominations—Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians—are they not?

Mr. MEEKER. And Episcopalians.

Mr. CANNON. Episcopalians. That makes four; and I suppose the Christian Church—

Mr. SIEGEL. The department did not state the subdivisions of the Protestant faith.

Mr. CANNON. I am not quite sure that the Christian Scientists are represented.

Mr. SIEGEL. The Christian Scientists will be taken care of under these 20, because this distinctly refers to such other faiths as are not represented at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. There are 40 or 45 Protestant organizations.

Mr. MEEKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There are 167.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if there can be a fair division, our Jewish or Hebrew friends will get about one.

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no. I want to say to the gentleman that in the camp at Yaphank, N. Y., right now they would be entitled to six, not considering at all the other 36 or 37 camps in different parts of the country. In the first 5 per cent of the men who went, 75 per cent were of the Jewish faith, and the other day, out of 10,000 men at Camp Upton, about 4,200 went home on account of the observation of the holy days, showing that approximately 40 per cent of the 10,000 at that camp were of the Jewish faith; and I may say also that although at the present time there are thousands of men of the Jewish faith in the Navy, there is not a single Jewish chaplain in the Navy, which condition Secretary Daniels is about to meet by making an appointment. Let me add that in the Army there is no chaplain of the Jewish faith.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose it is perfectly proper that a man should have religious consolation according to his belief, but I am under the impression that there are ten Christian Scientists to one Hebrew, and I have no doubt that there are ten Unitarians, who are at one with the Hebrews. I am not a Christian Scientist, and on the question of Unitarianism, as far as I am concerned, I am at one with the Hebrews and the Unitarians, but I have no doubt there are ten Unitarians to one Hebrew.

Mr. SIEGEL. In the Army to-day?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am not so certain about that. How many Unitarians are there in the Army to-day?

Mr. CANNON. I can not tell. Can the gentleman tell me how many Hebrews there are?

Mr. SIEGEL. There have been forty thousand and odd called out so far.

Mr. CANNON. Forty thousand and odd out of one million.

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no; more than 40,000 out of 400,000 in the national drafted army at the present time. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That would mean 400,000 Christian Scientists, according to the figures of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman say there are 40,000 Hebrews in the Army now?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the Christian Scientists are ten to one, that would be 400,000 Christian Scientists to 40,000 Jews.

Mr. SIEGEL. And, of course, the other denominations would not be represented at all.

Mr. KNUTSON. Where would the rest of us be?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not want to answer the question by saying that we would have to increase our population.

Mr. CANNON. After all is said and done, I have no possible prejudice against the Hebrews.

Mr. SIEGEL. I know that very well.

Mr. CANNON. And I am tolerably charitable to everybody else.

Mr. SIEGEL. We all know that the gentleman from Illinois is not only fair, but at all times very liberal in his views. His whole life is an evidence of that. There is not assurance that the President is going to appoint 20 chaplains of the Jewish faith, or 5, or any particular number of any particular faith.

Mr. CANNON. I am under the impression that only four or five of the Protestant organizations are represented among the chaplains now.

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not know very much about the condition to which the gentleman makes reference and therefore am unable to express any opinion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, a very peculiar condition is presented by the submission of this Senate bill for consideration in the House. In my experience I do not recall a similar condition.

The House on September 11, as Members will recall, passed the bill providing for the appointment by the President during the present emergency of 20 chaplains. That bill went over to the Senate. Subsequently thereto, after the House bill had been messaged over to the Senate, the Senate, instead of considering the House bill, said substantially by its action on this bill, "No; we will not consider the House bill providing for the 20 chaplains. We will not offer an amendment to the House bill in accordance with our ideas, but we will pass a substantially new bill and leave the House bill to slumber." So the Senate on September 13, two days after they had received the House bill on this subject, passed the bill (S. 2527) providing for 20 chaplains, though the appointment was somewhat restricted, and provided that 12 of them should represent religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now provided by law and 8 for service in base hospitals.

This Senate bill came over to the House and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The House Committee on Military Affairs struck out all of the Senate provision and substituted the language of the original House bill. Now, if we should pass this House bill and send it over to the Senate, what will be the legislative status? The Senate may say the House intended to have 40 chaplains instead of 20. It may pass the original House bill providing for 20 and then accept the Senate bill with the House amendment for 20 more. The practice is highly objectionable, and for that reason I object.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope if the gentleman from Wisconsin is going to make an objection he will make it now.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say that I have consulted with Senator SHEPPARD and he has asked that this bill be passed in this fashion.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe that the Senate should pigeonhole a House bill and then pass a Senate bill on the same identical subject.

Mr. SIEGEL. Does the gentleman believe that the legislation ought to be held up in this manner?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have no certainty whatever that it will be passed by the Senate in this way. We have sent over there a bill embodying this same matter, and they have not acted upon it. The responsibility is on the Senate.

Mr. SIEGEL. Both forms of bills were before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and the committee recommended this one.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is highly objectionable to pass in this way two bills involving the same subject, and I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. MILLER] is on a mission to Europe for the Red Cross. He has two bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar—both bridge bills—and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2434.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2434, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2434. An act authorizing the counties of Cass and Itasca, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between said counties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEENERSON, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for 10 days, on account of attendance on the Pneumatic Tube Commission meetings in Chicago and St. Louis.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, October 1, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 6361) to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 6362) to promote the efficiency of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6363) to provide for the service of officers of auxiliary naval forces on naval courts; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 6364) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 6386) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolution (H. Res. 157) to confer jurisdiction over appropriations and estimates upon a single committee; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 6365) granting an increase of pension to Charles J. Edington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6366) granting an increase of pension to John T. Bell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6367) granting an increase of pension to Frances A. Weddel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6368) granting an increase of pension to William H. Jackson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6369) granting an increase of pension to William H. Buchanan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6370) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Fredenburg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6371) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hedrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6372) granting an increase of pension to James W. Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6373) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Ward; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6374) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Willman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6375) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Tonnemacker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6376) granting an increase of pension to William Seal; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6377) granting an increase of pension to Laura McWilliams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6378) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. McPherson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6379) granting an increase of pension to John W. Amos; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6380) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Parker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6381) granting an increase of pension to John A. C. Hazel; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6382) granting a pension to Vance K. Stewart; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6383) granting a pension to George W. Dudley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6384) granting a pension to Eliza Sisco; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 6385) for the relief of Kenneth S. Cook, storekeeper, second class, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of National Association of Master Bakers, favoring the Stephens price-fixing bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Pompeian Co. favoring the necessary Government action to keep the American dollar at parity in every nation of the world; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the National Association of Master Bakers for the Stephens price-fixing bill—House bill 212; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

MONDAY, October 1, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we would unite our hearts this day with millions of hearts that have been going out to Thee in earnest prayer. We pray Thee to hear the prayers of Thy people, prayers that have been expressed in burning words before Thee, prayers that listen in the tear-drop, prayers that are voiced only in the sea of burdened hearts. O God, hear the prayers of Thy people. We seek no kingdom but Thine own. We seek to establish no policy but that which Thou dost inspire. We would fill our place among the nations of the earth according to the Divine will and plan; and we pray Thee this day to guide us to this end and bless us in our undertaking. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2813) to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. ESCH managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the Clerk, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, to insert after the word "explosives," in the first proviso of section 5 of the bill, as agreed to in conference, the words "are not subject to the provisions of this act."

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 20 days of labor, in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States, $100, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following: "years 1917 and 1918: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this resolution shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location, notice, or certificate is recorded on or before December 31, of each of the years 1917 and 1918, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this resolution: Provided further, That this resolution shall not apply to oil-placer locations or claims."

On page 2 of the bill strike out all of lines 19 and 20 and insert: "This resolution shall not be deemed to amend or repeal the public resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service,' approved July 17, 1917"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918."

And the House agree to the same.

HENRY F. ASHURST,

MILES POINDEXTER,

JOHN F. SHAFROTH,

M. D. FOSTER,

EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

EDWARD E. DENISON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions from the County Council of Defense of Burnett County, Wis.; from Edward Gillen, of Racine, Wis.; from L. B. Ring, superintendent of the Wisconsin Bay Welfare Movement, of Milwaukee, Wis.; from B. W. Bradfield, secretary of the Kiwanis Club, of St. Paul, Minn.; from Jean Rittanhouse, of San Diego, Cal.; and from W. E. D. Stokes, of New York City, N. Y., relative to the public utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I present four petitions from sundry organizations in the State of New York relating to the public utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SHAFROTH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Colorado, praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2937) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta; and

A bill (S. 2938) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, in Poinsett County, Ark., at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KNOX:

A bill (S. 2939) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. McBride; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 2940) granting an increase of pension to George W. Thompson;

A bill (S. 2941) granting an increase of pension to Phineas L. Packard; and

A bill (S. 2942) granting an increase of pension to Milton N. Campbell; to the Committee on Pensions.

MANUFACTURE AND STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. WALSH. On Thursday last the Senate adopted the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes. I desire to move to reconsider the vote and action of the Senate by which the conference report was adopted. I ask that the motion be entered and that for the present it be allowed to lie on the table. The bill having been returned to the other House, I move that it be recalled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on October 1, 1917, approved and signed the act (S. 2705) to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance.

STOCK-GRAZING HOMESTEADS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to call attention again to the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes. It is very important that that bill should be passed, and I understand there is probably only one Senator who will want to speak against it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HUSTING. I object.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not a copy of the bill before me, but at the proper place I wish to insert the word "Washington." I think it is in the first section of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are certain committee amendments which have not been considered. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Public Lands report, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Wyoming," to insert "Nevada, North Dakota," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to complete the classification or designation of lands within the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Nevada, North Dakota, and South Dakota, as provided in the stock-grazing homestead act in cases in which application has heretofore been made to enter land under said act, within six months of the enactment of this act; and that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to complete the classification or designation of lands within the aforesaid States as provided in the stock-grazing homestead act in cases in which application may hereafter be made to enter land under said act, within six months from date of the filing of application therefor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting "Washington."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On behalf of the Committee on Public Lands I will state that I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 13, after the word "Wyoming," to insert "Nevada, North Dakota."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move the same amendment to the amendment at that point.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, a bill similar to this was before the Senate at the last session. I opposed it at that time, and stated my reasons for opposing it. I wish to reiterate some of the objections that I have to the bill.

The bill, in my judgment, reverses the policy of the Government in regard to homestead entries, and virtually increases the number of acres in a homestead from the present number to 640 acres. The homestead laws of this country are laws of long standing, and if we are going to reverse ourselves or increase the acreage to the extent the bill proposes to increase it, it seems to me we ought to do it with our eyes open.

Last December there was a law passed providing for a 640-acre homestead for grazing purposes. When that bill was before the committee, and later on before the Senate, the argument then was made that certain lands in the West were not fit for agriculture; were not susceptible of irrigation, and it was not to apply to timber claims. It was urged that a man could not raise any considerable number of cattle on his homestead, and therefore it was argued that as to certain lands the homestead should include 640 acres instead of 320 acres.

Later in the session an attempt was made to wipe out the provisions of the act of December which safeguarded lands that were susceptible of irrigation and were fit for agriculture and contained timber. That proposed law provided that it should be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause surveys to be made of these lands in the West and to select lots of 640 acres and make a certification of the same so that lands susceptible of agriculture and of irrigation and which contained timber could not be entered upon. That was passed here, but the House refused to pass it, and that effort was futile.

Now comes this bill that practically wipes out all the safeguards, and as I read it and understand it that practically opens up all the lands in the States enumerated herein to public entry whether they contain timber or whether they are susceptible of irrigation or of agriculture. It is true that there are provisions in the bill which purport to exempt those, but the practical effect of the provisions which purport to exempt these lands amounts to nothing in my judgment. It simply lays open to entry a 640-acre homestead. The lands in the States that are included in the bill—New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, and I believe Washington has been added—take in a great many, if not all, the Western States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does the Senator recognize that the bill safeguards both the proposition of timber and the susceptibility of the lands for irrigation? Does not the Senator recognize that this language is used in the bill:

which contain in substance a verified statement by the applicant, corroborated by the affidavits of two disinterested parties, that the land within the original filing or entry does not contain merchantable timber suitable for lumber purposes; is not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, and that the land is chiefly valuable for grazing or raising forage crops, are hereby directed to be received—

And so forth.

Mr. HUSTING. I know that is what the bill purports to do, but I look upon it as camouflage; it says something, but it does not mean anything in practical effect.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize in the first instance that the Secretary of the Interior has six months in which to make the survey and to determine as to whether the lands are to come within the provisions of the act, and then if he does not do that the man who is upon the land or who files upon the land has got to file his affidavit, and then for one year thereafter the Government has a right to dispute that and say it is not so?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator, in answer, that this provision of one year is a statute of limitation. It runs and only runs for one year, and at the end of one year they are confirmed in the title. That looks a little like a joker in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that under the 320-acre homestead act nearly all the semiarid lands have been subject to entry, and those that have not been entered are really the poorest of the lands. I have not any doubt that ninety-nine one-hundredths of all the land that is now open to entry in the States named would properly come within the designation of lands for grazing purposes or for the raising of forage crops.

Mr. HUSTING. Then I will ask the Senator why all this attempt to make it appear that these lands are going to be settled? Why the declarative features of the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The object is to satisfy Senators just like the Senator from Wisconsin who think there may be something wrong and not correct. We want to safeguard that so that it seems to me the Senator from Wisconsin would have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HUSTING. I will state to the Senator that if he seeks to satisfy Senators like myself he fails very ignominiously. The bill does not satisfy me at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that the Senator ought to be satisfied.

Mr. HUSTING. I do not think anybody else will be satisfied with this provision who is really against a 640-acre homestead. This bill, and this particular feature of it, is not going to be effective. It has been argued that the law of December, 1916, should be amended because the Interior Department has not time to investigate the character of the lands, and that, consequently, the law is ineffective, because the department can not go and examine into the character of these lands. If it is the fact, and no doubt it is the fact, that they can not make a survey of all these lands within a year or within a year and a half, or possibly within two years, then what good is it going to do to say that they could come in within a year and contest the character of the land that it is claimed is not susceptible of irrigation and of agriculture and contains no timber? What good will it do to say that unless within a year contest is made against the homestead claims when you know and argue that the very reason you want the law amended is because the Interior Department can not make a survey of the lands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator's question. The situation with respect to these lands is that we out West think that the semiarid lands are practically good for nothing except for grazing purposes or the raising of forage crops. The Secretary of the Interior was authorized by Congress nearly a year ago to proceed to permit these lands to be entered. He has not made the classification, because he said there was no appropriation available for that purpose. Since that time the Congress of the United States has appropriated $150,000 for the purpose. Inasmuch as the lands have not been classified, if any man goes upon them and makes entry, in the absence of this proposed statute, not only the Government can contest but any individual who feels that he ought to have the right to locate a 160 or 320 acre homestead can contest the entry. Such entry is likely to be contested if it is on a very valuable piece of land. With the incentive upon the part of a person who desires to enter the land to see that no fraud is committed, and also the watchfulness of the Government in examining into the matter and trying to detect where anyone has committed a fraud against the Government, between the two, within the period of a year or a year and a half afforded by the bill—because a person first has 6 months and then a year thereafter, making 18 months—it seems to me we ought to be able to detect any instance where a filing has been improperly made.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, it merely comes down to this, that the law of December, 1916, ought to be amended, according to the Senator from Colorado, for the reason that the Interior Department has not time to survey and certify these lands. Therefore it is provided that men may go and enter the lands without such certification, and then, unless the department or an individual comes before the Land Office and contests the entry within a year, the title to the homestead is confirmed. That simply means that the department can not investigate the matter within a year, and so, consequently, every entry which is made will be confirmed, because there will not be anybody there to contest it, which means that almost every entry under this proposed act will be in effect a homestead entry that will never be contested. That bears out exactly what I previously said, that this virtually means that homesteads with 640 acres will be allowed, instead of a smaller area.

There is not any use discussing that; we might as well face it. If that is what the Senate wants, if that is what Congress wants, that is enough; but let us not deceive ourselves into believing that the department or any individual is going to have any opportunity to question a homestead entry. It means that lands, whether they are susceptible to agriculture or to irrigation, or whether or not they contain timber, are open to homestead entry. Anyone who wants a 640-acre homestead can go and get it.

The Senator says there are not any such lands left; then why indulge in this kind of verbiage here? Why have it appear that agricultural land and land susceptible of irrigation are going to be reserved, when you know that such lands can not be reserved under this bill?

I do not know that there is anything further I can add to these remarks, except to say that I do not believe it is for the best interests of the country, I do not believe it is for the best interests of any State, to parcel out land in chunks of 640 acres for homesteads. That is not a homestead and never can be a homestead in the proper sense of the word; it is an estate; it is a whole section of land. Instead of encouraging settlers to come in there, instead of encouraging the settling up of the States, it will mean that these great areas of land are going to pass into the hands of a few individuals. Under the old system of a limited number of acres of homestead, lands are far too frequently getting into the hands of large landed proprietors, and the country is fast becoming a country of landlords and tenants, and not of landowners. Only the other day I saw a discussion in the newspapers about that matter by a very eminent citizen of the United States, pointing out the danger of this country, becoming a country of landlords and tenants. The very thing that we have combated and opposed for all these years, the policy of the Government trying to keep the lands in the hands of individuals, and not in the hands of large landed proprietors, is going to be overturned. We are going to turn over the West to those who have some reason why they want to get a section of land instead of a half section or a quarter section. Of course, they want to get it; of course, there is a demand there for it; but you will never get a State settled up by having one family only on every section of land in the State.

If that is going to be the policy of the Government, if Congress is going to turn about face and overturn the traditions of a half century, that is all very good and right, if Congress says so. However, I do not want it to be done without a protest on my part. I have opposed even the consideration of this bill, because I know it is difficult to interest Congress at this late day in the session, when it is engaged in vast war problems, in a domestic matter of this kind, important though it may be. I do not think it ought to be entertained at this time. It is not a war measure; it is not a matter for which this Congress was called in special session, and yet here, at this late day, without debate—for, I presume, I am the only one who is going to take the opportunity to protest against the passage of this bill—we are going to do these things.

I protest against it. I think it is a bad policy; I think it is establishing a precedent that is going to come back to vex this country in the future. I do not think we are acting as the trustees of a great trust ought to act in this matter.

I understand that Senators here from the West are unanimously in favor of this measure, but this is a matter in which not they alone are interested. The country, as a whole, is interested in the disposition of these vast domains; and too much carelessness has resulted in a great deal of injury to the country as it is.

We permitted the public domain to pass into the hands of private owners, and in many instances into the hands of vast landed proprietors, and if we do not look out we will have to face a landlord and tenant proposition in the near future. I do not know how we shall be able to deal with it then if we now allow the title to get out of our hands.

For that reason I am doing all I can to oppose and protest against this backward step, one which, in my humble opinion, is fraught with disastrous consequences.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate just for a moment to say that I do not believe the Senator from Wisconsin understands the situation that prevails in the West or he would not oppose this piece of legislation. I think it is impossible for a man even to glimpse conditions that prevail in that arid section without having some intimate knowledge of the country.

The land made available for entry under the 640-acre homestead law is not territory that has been withheld from settlement; it is a section that has been ridden over by men for from 40 to 50 years and has not been settled only because its generally rugged surface and arid character were such that every man who knew anything about western conditions understood that it could not be profitably developed in the comparatively small allotments permitted under the homestead laws of the past. There are thousands of men living in the towns of my State at this time, and of all other States to which the law applies, who are not even availing themselves of this opportunity to take lands, because they are unwilling to undergo the hardships that every homesteader must endure who undertakes to build a home upon the arid land now remaining of the public domain. They do not care to make the necessary sacrifice for the small benefit to be gained.

The difficulty of the situation now confronting us is found in the delay in designating the lands subject to entry under the stock-raising law. There have been some 60,000 filings made upon the Government domain under this law. The people have in many cases forsaken their former homes, have gone to this arid country and filed upon the land, and yet they are denied the right to go upon the land to begin improvements and to inaugurate the processes of production.

It is claimed by the Senator from Wisconsin that we are rushing into a condition of landlordism. If he understood the situation there as well as do those of us who live in that section of the country, he would realize that a section of this arid land is not equivalent to 40 acres of land in the State of Wisconsin.

As I have already said, thousands of people have made filings under this law, but, after having abandoned their old homes, they are not allowed to occupy the new homes which they seek. Hundreds and thousands of settlers, learning that the 640-acre law had been passed, and not realizing that the land subject to its operation had to be designated by experts of the Geological Survey, left their old communities, sold out what they owned, cut all their old ties, and emigrated into the States where this dry land was still to be had. Then, after arriving in the sections where they had imagined they were going to build their new homes, they learned that under the law it was impossible for them to go upon the land, and have been forced to take advantage of any expedient that offered itself in order to make a living while waiting for the Government to act upon the designation of the lands they sought. I am sure that if the Senator from Wisconsin understood the situation as it really exists and if he could glimpse the inconvenience and hardships that have been visited upon these people by this delay, he would realize that this proposed law is a real necessity and ought to be passed at this time.

I am confident that the Senator is as honest in his opposition to the measure as others of us are in our support of it, but the Senator hardly seems to realize the situation confronting the settlers who are endeavoring to develop the arid portions of the West.

In addition to this situation, there is another feature that I am reminded to speak of, and that is that the law unfortunately did not provide against filing until the classification of the land was made. Consequently the rush to the land offices to secure homesteads was so great that the limited force in the offices was unable even to record on the maps the filings as they were made. As a result, in many cases duplication after duplication of filings was made. That means contention and strife, and all Senators know that no such bitterness grows out of anything in neighborhoods as that which grows out of contention over land ownership.

Another thing in connection with this matter, Mr. President, is the fact that this is not, as the Senator from Wisconsin believes, a big man's proposition; it is essentially for the benefit of the small man. For years and years this territory has been occupied and used solely and entirely by large sheep and cattle companies, and it was not possible, under prevailing conditions for a small owner to gain a footing. It was my privilege to be the first man in my State to advocate the enlarged homestead act. I based my advocacy of such a measure upon a lifetime of observation of the operation of the homestead laws as they stood. It was my conviction that one of the things most needed was an increase of population—that is to say, that it was to the interest of the Commonwealth to have many owners with small herds and flocks instead of a few owners with large herds and flocks. Such an increase could not be secured, I felt certain, under the laws as they then existed, because most of the land which was left was not sufficiently productive for a man to maintain a home on a small area of it.

I need only point out to you that after 40 years of settlement under all of the homestead acts only about one-fifth of the lands of my State have up to this time passed to title, and there are thirty or forty million acres of land still unoccupied. What the average person, not familiar with conditions in the West, fails to understand is that these thirty or forty million acres do not represent valuable agricultural territory. The land, on the other hand, is adaptable almost entirely to purposes of grazing or stock-growing alone. In order that a man may be able to establish himself on such land, he must have sufficient acreage to care for a large enough band of stock to support his family. It was the final recognition of this fact that brought about the adoption of the 640-acre law. It is now obviously the duty of Congress, having enacted the 640-acre law, to provide for its operation with the least possible delay.

I am constrained to hope that the Senate will act favorably upon this measure, because under no circumstances can it bring any disastrous consequences; it can give no man any benefit to which he is not entitled; and it will render a benefit, and an important one, to the thousands of people who are now waiting around in little towns and villages to go on these lands upon which they have made their filings. It is for these people that I bespeak your consideration.

Mr. PHELAN and Mr. BRADY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to submit an amendment to the bill. After the word "Washington," I move to insert the word "California."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Washington," in the list of States, it is proposed to insert "California."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Public Lands, I can state that there is no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I move to amend section 1 by including the name "Oregon," after the name "California," just submitted by the senior Senator from that State,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I desire to say that I do not want to go on record as agreeing to the amendments which have just been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, the Chair will put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say a few words in relation to the bill, since the Senator from Wisconsin is objecting to its passage.

This is not a bill that establishes any right. When the 640-acre homestead act was passed, then the right of settlers to enter upon the public domain for the purpose of filing and entering a homestead existed. This is simply a proposed remedial statute. The Secretary of the Interior has not been able to classify the lands. The 640-acre homestead act provides that all lands good for raising forage crops or for grazing should be open to entry. That law is on the statute books and has existed for 9 or 10 months. The Secretary of the Interior, however, has been unable to get the surveys made designating what lands are fit only for grazing purposes or the raising of forage crops, and consequently it is necessary to have some way of determining it other than through his office, unless he does it within the next six months.

This bill simply provides that he shall use the money which he has for six months in classifying the land. If he has not classified it at the end of that time, then a man has a right to go on the public domain and locate 640 acres of that kind of land, and if afterwards it is discovered that it is land suitable for irrigation, or if it is discovered that it is suitable for any other purpose than that which is specified in the bill, then the department has a right to object to it or an individual contestant has a right to object to it and claim the land for other purposes. That being the case, it seems to me he ought to take the man's affidavit, verified by the affidavits of two disinterested parties, that it is land fit only for grazing or for forage crops.

The immediate emergency of this matter arises from the fact that there are 60,000 men now on the plains out West and in the mountains ready to file, and the land offices will not receive the filings because the land has not been designated as forage-raising land or grazing land only. Men can not develop a country under any such conditions. A man's patience will be worn out; he will not stay there a year and wait for the Interior Department to survey the land and to indicate that it is good for these purposes only. It is said that 60,000 people are out on lands in the West waiting for the hour to come when they can file their homestead entries in the various land offices. Now, it seems to me that it is an outrage to let those people stay there, without any aid whatever upon the part of the Government, when they are trying to comply with a law that has been passed by this body and by the House of Representatives by almost a unanimous vote.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. Where are these 60,000 men located? Are they on the lands that they want to file on?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course some of them are on the lands.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. In the majority of cases these settlers have gathered around little towns waiting for the opportunity to go upon the land. They are staying anywhere they can. Many of them with their families are living in tents; and, as the Senator has said, they are not allowed to go upon these lands, and in many cases more than one filing has been made upon the same tract. Now, the quicker that confusion is corrected and we establish a condition of order there the better it will be for all concerned.

Mr. HUSTING. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that these 60,000 men, or a great many of them, are on this land already.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Some of them did go on the land and some of them did stay there, anticipating and hoping to secure patents to them, and there may be some there yet. I do not know about that. I do know, however, that the Interior Department has reported that between 50,000 and 60,000 applications have been sought to be filed. That is what is stated in a communication that was sent by the department on that subject.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, owing to the fact that we are not asking to have Idaho included in the States that receive the benefits of this bill, I feel that I should say a few words relative to my position in the matter.

Some time ago Congress passed a law authorizing the homesteads named in this bill and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make the classification. He has not been able to do so up to this time. Owing to the fact that I am exceedingly anxious that no land should be included or attempted to be included in any of these entries where the land could be used for more beneficial purposes, I have refrained from asking to have Idaho named in the bill. I feel quite confident that at a later day, if it is found that the Secretary of the Interior can not properly classify our land, we will have no trouble in having Congress give us relief.

On the other hand, this is a bill that means much to the people of the West; and in the States of New Mexico and Arizona and the other States that have been named in the bill there is very little, if any, land left at this time that will be useful for other purposes than the purposes named in this bill. For that reason I am in favor of the passage of the bill. I believe that the Senators from the States named know what their citizens desire and what they should have, and I do not believe they would ask the Government to do anything that it should not do. This simply enables them to go on and make the entries without the necessity of waiting for years and years to have this classification made. If there is any question on the part of the Government that this should be done before the bill goes into effect, it has six months in which to make the classification, and it can be done in that time if necessary.

While I do not ask to have my State included, I am heartily in favor of letting those States that really want and need the benefit of this bill have the privilege of having this land entered without classification. For that reason I shall support the bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to say that the measure provides that the Government may designate this land at any time within the next six months, or that six months must elapse after the passage of the bill before the locator may take possession of the land, and the Government has 12 months after that in which to contest the claimant's right to the land. This gives the Government practically one year and a half in which to act adversely in case it is found necessary to do so. In the meantime, the man who has filed upon the land knows definitely that within six months' time, instead of at some indefinite future date, he may begin work on his land.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator from Wyoming is entirely correct. It does not give any man an undue advantage. It simply enables the homesteader to go on and make his entry, and if at the end of six months the land is not classified, that does not mean that he can hold that land if he has made a fraudulent entry or made any misrepresentation. In that event any citizen of the United States can contest it, or the Government can contest it on its own motion. There is no advantage that can be gained. It is simply giving an opportunity to these 60,000 men who are out there waiting at this time to go on their lands and commence improvements.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. BRADY. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTING. Does the Senator say that after the year of limitation has expired the question can be opened on any ground?

Mr. BRADY. Under this bill, as I understand, the Government has six months in which to make the classification. If at the end of that time the classification has not been made, the men who are on the land, or those who want to enter the land, can make the application, make their affidavits as to what kind of land it is, and that will be simply prima facie evidence. I ask the Senator from New Mexico if I am correct about that?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; the Senator is correct.

Mr. BRADY. It is not conclusive evidence; it is simply prima facie evidence.

Mr. HUSTING. I know, but I mean after the year of limitation in which contests must be filed, if at all. What does the Senator say about the effect on this of the running of the one-year period?

Mr. BRADY. Does the Senator think that the men would not have opportunity to file before the six months' period was up?

Mr. HUSTING. This bill provides, on page 3, line 3—

That the filing of any such application shall be only prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and that an individual or the Government may, within one year after the allowance of such application, institute a contest against such application upon the ground that such facts so stated are not true.

Does the Senator claim that after this year has run these facts are still only prima facie and may be contested later on the ground of fraud?

Mr. BRADY. I do.

Mr. HUSTING. Does the Senator from New Mexico hold that opinion?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico rose.

Mr. BRADY. I mean to say that when the man makes his entry it is to be used as prima facie evidence only. I have no objection to any man taking a 640-acre homestead; and my understanding of the real objection of the Senator from Wisconsin—and I think it is the understanding of the other members of the committee—is that it is not so much to this plan as it is that the Senator is opposed to 640-acre homesteads. Is that correct?

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator is not quite correct—not completely correct.

Mr. BRADY. What is the position of the Senator, then, relative to this bill?

Mr. HUSTING. When the Senator has finished I will state my position again; but I wish to say at this time that I believe it is the intent and meaning of this bill that after a year shall have run no contest on any ground shall be instituted; and if I am incorrect in that respect I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico correct me.

Mr. BRADY. After what length of time—one year?

Mr. HUSTING. One year.

Mr. BRADY. That is correct, according to my understanding of the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am not willing that the Senator from Wisconsin shall be misled as to the provisions of this bill. During the first six months after the passage of the bill the Government has the right to examine these lands and classify them. It has the same right within six months after the filing of any new application. At the end of the six months the applicant for the land may file an affidavit stating the facts required by this bill, corroborated by the affidavits of two disinterested parties, and those affidavits then constitute a prima facie classification of the land under the 640-acre homestead law; but within a year of that time the Government, or any individual, may contest the truthfulness of those affidavits. After the expiration of that year the statements in those affidavits can not be controverted, but the applicant must still comply with all the other provisions of the homestead law, and he can not be contested with respect to anything except the classification.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRADY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HUSTING. That means that the affidavits, notwithstanding that they may have no foundation in fact, can be taken as a barrier after the expiration of the year, does it not?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. After that time this is a statute of limitations upon contesting the classification of the land, just the same as we have a statute of limitations governing many other things.

Mr. HUSTING. And that statute of limitations would run on a fraudulent or a false affidavit?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Just the same as the present law provides.

Mr. BRADY. The same conditions and the same proof would be required as would be required under the present law, and it is only fair and just that the people who live in these States be given the opportunity to make these selections at this time. There can be no fraud perpetrated. There will be no fraud perpetrated. The bill simply enables these men to secure homesteads who have gone out there for that purpose; and I sincerely hope that the bill will pass.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] says that no fraud will be perpetrated. I am willing to concede the good faith in which the Senator makes that statement, but I hardly think he is in a position to guarantee that no fraud will be perpetrated, especially when, after a year, the fraud can not be looked into.

My objection to this bill, which I will restate briefly, is this: It purports to be a 640-acre grazing homestead act, when, as a matter of fact and in effect, it is a 640-acre homestead act.

Mr. BRADY. And that is in reality what the Senator from Wisconsin objects to.

Mr. HUSTING. I object to the bill, in the first place, on the ground that it is covered up with a lot of verbiage and verbal scenery that makes it appear to be something which in effect it is not going to be. The bill proceeds upon the theory that the act of 1916, which was a 640-acre homestead grazing act, is not practicable, because the Department of the Interior will not have time to look into and certify the character of the lands. Therefore it is deemed necessary, in order to make it practicable, to provide something that will do away with the necessity of any survey. Now, if the Department of the Interior has not time enough to certify it in advance within a year, how is the Department of the Interior going to be in a position to certify it in the same length of time after these men get title to homesteads?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will state that the reason why the Secretary of the Interior was not able to classify this land was on account of the want of an appropriation. There was an appropriation made for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1918, but that has been in force only about two months, and consequently he has had only two months' time in which to classify the land. This bill gives him six months longer in which to classify it, and then it gives the right, for one year after that, to object to any entry that has been made on the ground that it is not forage or grazing land.

Mr. HUSTING. I ask the Senator if he believes that the Department of the Interior in a year and a half's time will be able to examine, survey, and certify the character of all the lands in these States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think there will be objections made by people who want these lands if they are anything else than grazing lands and forage-raising lands. If they do not object, that is a clear indication to my mind that they are of that character.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator has not answered my question. I should like to know whether he believes that the Department of the Interior will be able in a year and a half's time from now to certify, survey, and examine all of the lands in all of these States and make a certificate as to their character?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether they will or not. It depends upon the speed with which they go at the work. It depends upon how many men they have.

Mr. HUSTING. I ask the Senator, judging by what has been done in the two months that they have been engaged in the work, whether any appreciable portion of the millions and millions of acres can be surveyed and certified within that time, in his opinion?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know what they have done in the last two months and consequently I can not answer the Senator's question; but if it takes a longer period of time than that it is an outrage that men shall not be permitted to take advantage of the homestead laws of the United States; and it seems to me that inasmuch as we know that the general character of this land is grazing land, the affidavit of the man filing the application and the affidavits of two disinterested witnesses ought to be sufficient if the Interior Department can not get around to it.

Mr. HUSTING. I will ask the Senator whether the reason he wants this act passed is not because he believes that the Department of the Interior can not examine and survey and certify these lands in a year and a half?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not think so. I must say that a critical survey to be made by going on each tract of 640 acres is something that is not necessary. I know something of the land in that part of the country, and I think I could do it in a very short time.

Mr. HUSTING. Then this bill is not necessary, because if the Secretary of the Interior may survey the land in the time of a year and a half, then under the law of 1916 you have that remedy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You have not your remedy, because that referred to a classification of the land. It was presumed that that would be done easily and quickly, and inasmuch as the Secretary has not had the time to do it and has not had the money with which to do it it seems to me we ought to give relief to the people who are desiring to make these entries.

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator in reply that unless he can give a better reason every reason for the passage of this bill is lost, because there is a law now—the law of December, 1916—which provides for 640-acre grazing homesteads just as fast as the Department of the Interior can certify to the character of the land. Then there is no need of this additional legislation. This bill either is necessary or it is not necessary to serve the purpose for which it was introduced.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HUSTING. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that in talking with the head of the Geological Survey, the department that has to do with this question of designation, I was informed that they would be able to do the largest part of this classification within the year and a half, but the difficulty is found in the fact that until the last of the land is classified these people are denied the right to go upon the land and go to work. This will simply save them the loss of one year's time.

Mr. HUSTING. This law is either necessary or it is not necessary. The act of 1916 provides for 640 acres, subject to a certification by the Secretary of the Interior, as a proposed grazing homestead, not in fact an agricultural homestead. If the Department of the Interior in a year and a half can survey and certify all these lands, then there is no need of this amendment to the law, because then they will all have been certified and surveyed and you have got all the relief that you claim you need.

But the argument has been made here over and over again that the reason why it is necessary is because 60,000 people are waiting to go on this land, and the Department of the Interior has not the time, the facility, the money, or the ability within a year to survey millions upon millions of acres of land. I can only infer from that that some Senators want to have this bill passed in order to wipe away all obstructions in the way of getting agricultural homesteads. A year and a half from now, or a year from the time the application is made, even though it has not been acted upon, though no patent has been issued, in a year's time from the filing of the application the homestead is confirmed in the man who makes the application, it does not make any difference whether it is agricultural land or land susceptible of irrigation, timberlands, or anything of that kind.

Not only that, but by the admission of the Senator from New Mexico it cures all fraud in that time. Now, what can be expected of this bill? Sixty thousand people are ready to go on land to-day who have been waiting, as the Senator says, because their particular tracts have not been surveyed and have not been certified. Within a day or two after the bill passes they will file their application or prove they filed their application, and if the Department of the Interior can not within a year's time investigate these lands or survey them they are confirmed in their title.

It does not make any difference what they put in their affidavit, it is only a question of opinion that they have expressed. You can not indict men either for perjury or for fraud when they only say they believe. They believe, and that is all they can do. They believe it is not susceptible of irrigation or susceptible of cultivation as agricultural land. So the result will simply be this, and there is no use in blinding ourselves to it, it is just as plain as day, that if they go on and file their application in a year's time it does not make any difference what they put in their affidavit as to their land. Judging by some of the things that have occurred in the past in regard to mineral lands, and in regard to lands of all kinds, it will be a violent presumption, indeed, to say that men are not going to make an affidavit that is going to confirm them in their land by expressing an opinion whether it is susceptible of irrigation or not. That is a mental operation very difficult to disprove.

So the effect of this bill will simply be this: The men will go on the land. They will file. The Department of the Interior has confessed and admitted here it will not be in a position to make these examinations and these certifications. Consequently in a year's time those homesteads will be confirmed to them. It does not make any difference whether there was perjury. It does not make any difference whether there was fraud. It just cuts it off. Here are 60,000 people waiting to go on lands that are not susceptible of irrigation, that are not susceptible of agriculture. They are waiting there. They want their titles confirmed. They want to go and get a 640-acre tract.

Why did these men wait? Why can they not get 320 or 160 acre homesteads? There are homestead laws now. Why do they not enter under the present homestead law? Why do they want this bill passed, and why are they keeping off unless they are given assurance that this sort of a bill is going to be passed? They are simply waiting to get a better thing than they have now. They can take a 320-acre homestead. They want 640 acres. That is what they want, and they think they are going to get it; and not only do they think so, but they are assured, as a matter of fact, from the very nature of things, that the department will not be given enough time within a year to find out what the character of the land is.

It does not make any difference whether it is the finest agricultural land in the country. Senators speak of this as an arid-land proposition. I do not know that they would class all of the land in California and Oregon as arid land. You can get pretty good agricultural land in California and in Oregon, and I have not any doubt that they would get good land in the other States. I have listened to these debates here. I have been accused of want of knowledge of conditions in these various States. Intimations have been made that this really is a matter on which I am not competent to express an opinion. I grant the right of the knowledge of the facts on the part of Senators who live there. I know my own State, and I presume they know theirs. This is not a question of the knowledge of facts. It is a question of policy. Are we going to give away the land that is left in chunks of 640 acres regardless of the character of the land? It is a matter of national policy, and wide, far-reaching national policy, and upon that I reserve the right to express my own view.

But I do want to say, notwithstanding the faith I have in the knowledge of the Senators and in their good faith, I should dislike to go around in their own States and make a campaign on the ground that they have not got anything left in those States but arid land. If that is the kind of advertisement you send out broadcast all over the United States, that you have not got any land left in all of these broad empires of the West—New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Nevada, North and South Dakota, California, Oregon, and Washington—that those are nothing but desert areas, where a man can not make a living unless he has 640 acres of land, I am afraid that it would insult the people of those States. Not only that, but if the Senators want to go around the United States and advertise their States in that way they need not be surprised if they do not get any people to move into them, because nobody wants to move into a desert. Nobody wants to go to a place where nothing grows, and where men can not eke out an existence unless they get 640 acres of land. It is a pretty strong indictment of those States, and as a good American I do not subscribe to that indictment. As I said, notwithstanding the faith I have in the Senators who make it, I think when they make these statements they make them in a Pickwickian sense. I do not think they mean exactly what they say about it. I think they will have to admit right down deep in their hearts that they have a few garden spots and a few oases in their deserts that might be worth having, even if they could not get it in lots of 640 acres.

Now, we talk about developing the West. Of course, one family on every section may be a big average just now in those States, but it is not only for to-day, I hope. We all hope that the West is going to be settled more densely sometime, and it is being settled now. We all know that more than one family can live on a section of land out in the West. But if you do not get any more than that you are not going to have your State settled and improved and developed as your associates in other States fondly hoped you would. We all take a great deal of pride in the West. We are all interested in the West, even if we do not all live there. We can not all live there. I do think those States have good land, land that can attract farmers and can sustain their families on a half section or a quarter section, and therefore we ought not to put this whole thing into a pot now and have a case of grab out of it. We should not let people get great tracts of land. The time will come, as it has come already in the older States, when a man who has 80 acres has a pretty good piece of land.

This bill marks an epoch in our public-land legislation, and I would not have been so insistent, and I would not be so insistent now, if it was not a departure from an established policy and from a sound public policy. Land must be let out in small lots so that the poor man can get a home and not leave it all to rich men, not leave it to land barons, so that ordinary folks can not get a home and raise a family and develop the State. I would not want my State developed in that way. I would not want any State in which I have any interest developed in that way, and I hope I have some interest, as an American citizen at least, in the States of the West. After stripping all the camouflage out of the bill, after cutting it all out and pruning it down, you have got a 640-acre homestead act that can be applied to agricultural lands, lands susceptible of irrigation, timberland and everything else. That is what it is going to amount to in practice, it does not make any difference what it is covered around with. I think it is a mistake. I do not think the bill ought to be passed. I think it is so important that I should like to have the yeas and nays upon its passage when it comes to a vote.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it might be illuminating to some in the Senate who desire to know something about conditions in my State, for example, if they would refer to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915. On pages 112 and 113 there is a graphic description of the lands in the various counties of New Mexico as given in this official report by the Department of the Interior. I am going to ask that the table be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, but I want to call attention specifically to the description of a few of the counties in the districts in New Mexico as given by the department.

New Mexico, in the Clayton district, Colfax, 45,620 acres public lands, arid, broken, grazing.

In Mora County 23,680 acres, mostly grazing, some broken.

In Quay County, 12,800 acres, grazing.

In San Miguel County, 26,800 acres, grazing.

In Union County, 394,000, grazing, broken.

In Fort Sumner land district, Chaves County, 610,733 acres, arid, broken, grazing. I will not read entirely through this list. In the Roswell land district, six counties or a portion of six counties in southern New Mexico, there is not one in which the lands belonging to the United States Government are classified by the Government itself as agricultural land. In the Santa Fe district, 14 counties, there are four counties in which there are classified some agricultural land, and in this district, with the exception of one county in the Tucumcari district, are the only counties in which the Government has found any agricultural land.

In the department itself there are now field notes of every 640 acres of the public lands in New Mexico which have been surveyed. By an examination of those field notes of land by the United States surveyor who makes the survey approved by the Surveyor General and approved by the department here, the land is described as to its surface character, and as to whether it is agricultural or not. All of that data is here in the office.

Under the 640-acre homestead act or under the construction placed upon it by the Secretary of the Interior it was necessary for the applicant to state the exact character of every portion of every 40-acre subdivision within the 640 acres. That data they have not in the office here. They have all the data with reference to the exterior limits of a township consisting of 36 sections. They have all the data with reference to the exterior limits of every 640 acres. They have generally the data with reference to every 160 acres, and from that, within the next six months, availing themselves of other information of like character which they have on record, it would be easy enough for the department to practically classify every 640 acres of land in the entire State of New Mexico which has been surveyed and which is subject to this proposed 640-acre homestead act.

They can not, however, of course, within that time survey every sixteenth of an acre or every portion or fraction of every 40 acres, these sixteen-fortieths, within the 640 acres, 40 acres being the smallest unit of land measurement which is known to the law; but they require the homesteader, under the regulations adopted in pursuance of the 640-acre law, to certify as to the particular sort of grass that grows there; whether there is summer or winter range, spring or fall range, upon every 40 acres out of every 640-acre tract, going beyond, in my judgment, the intent of Congress in providing a 640-acre grazing homestead.

This bill is simply to facilitate the classification of those 640-acre tracts for homestead purposes by allowing the department to obtain information with reference to any specific tract where they have any information here, so they can classify these lands generally as subject to the provisions of the law.

Under the provisions of that law also—by mistake, in my judgment—the lands were to be classified as fit for grazing and raising forage crops; that is the dual purpose; that these 640-acre tracts were to be fit for grazing and raising forage crops. The Secretary of the Interior—and possibly any other Secretary would have done so—construed that law to limit him so that no man could obtain a homestead upon a section which was fit only for raising forage crops, but that he must classify those lands which were fit for the dual purpose of grazing and also raising forage crops; and that no others could be so classified. He has held in his instructions that it did not apply to the grazing lands at all in New Mexico or in any of the other States; that it did not apply to agricultural lands, but that it only applied to lands upon which forage crops other than grain crops could be raised and those lands some portions of which at the same time were fit for grazing and not fit for agriculture. Therefore, he held that every 40 acres within the exterior boundaries of the 640-acre tract applied for as a homestead must be described, and described accurately. Nothing of the kind has ever been required with reference to any homestead or with reference to any other land law, whether it was a 640-acre desert-land law or the 160-acre or the 320-acre law, as in some States where they had for years the 640-acre homestead law. No requirement of that kind has ever been made before; but under the peculiar wording, as I thought at the time it came from the committee a mistaken wording, using the conjunctive "and," the Secretary so construed this act as that under the peculiar conditions in New Mexico no man could obtain a 640-acre entry.

Those are the facts. This bill is simply to remedy those conditions.

I ask, Mr. President, that the classification of lands of New Mexico, as contained on pages 112 and 113 of the official report of 1915 of the Department of the Interior, may be printed as a portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it is not difficult for those who have followed this discussion to discern that the real objection of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] is not to the measure that is now before the Senate. His real objection is to the act to which his address and his argument are directed, to the mistaken policy of the 640-acre homestead act, rather than to the measure that is before us, which contemplates an expedition of classification under that act.

I regret very much, indeed that the Senator from Wisconsin never seems to sympathize with the difficulties that present themselves to those of us who come from the western section of the country and who are more specially concerned and interested in the laws in relation to the disposition of the public lands.

I should like to have the Senator from Wisconsin reflect for a moment upon the condition of affairs that is presented in my State. Under the 640-acre homestead act anyone may make an application to enter a tract of that area, and his application remains on file until eventually the classification of that land is made. Meanwhile no one else may take that land. The consequence is that in my State since the enactment of this law practically every tract of land is valuable that by any kind of stretch of imagination can be construed as coming within the provisions of this act, and has been applied for. Now, although it may not be subject to entry under this act, but subject to entry only under the 320-acre act or the 160-acre act, the thing stands there until the classification is made, and practically no man can enter any homestead lands in the State of Montana at all until this classification is made. The Senator from Wisconsin is not concerning himself with legislation intended to speed the classification of that land. I wish he would do so. It would give some of us a little more heart.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALSH. I do; but if the Senator will pardon me, as I am going to vote with him upon this matter, perhaps he will indulge me further.

Mr. HUSTING. I merely do not want the Senator from Montana to put me in a false position. I will say that I will vote for any measure that is thought advisable to speed the survey or certification of this land.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I appreciate that the Senator from Wisconsin will do that; but that is not what I am complaining about. What I am complaining about is that he never exerts himself to relieve the situation. Of course, if some one else does and a measure of that kind comes up, I have no doubt that the Senator will vote for it.

But, Mr. President, notwithstanding the animadversions which I have made upon the attitude and position of the Senator from Wisconsin, I find myself unable to give my approval to this measure. I regret very much that that is the case, because I should like to be in harmony always on these matters with the Senators from the section of the country from which I come, who, with myself, are deeply interested in these questions; but I believe it is a mistake, and I regret very much that I have not had an opportunity to present these views to the Committee on Public Lands rather than to express them thus in the open Senate.

Here is the situation: Those applications are already on file; this land is all tied up under the 640-acre act. The classification can not possibly be completed within the six months prescribed by this proposed act; it can not be completed, I undertake to say, within twice or three times that period. As soon as the six months expire, the man who has an application on file, the classification not having been made, who submits his proofs concerning the character of the land, is entitled to enter that land. Then the classification goes on. The Secretary of the Interior within a year after that time will institute an inquiry in relation to the character of the land; but, Mr. President, everybody recognizes that the men who then proceed to make the classification are under all manner of constraint to classify the land as coming within the provisions of the 640-acre act, because the settler has gone upon the land; he has built his house; he has made his residence there; he has moved his family upon the land; he has fenced the land; he has possibly broken up some of it in order to carry on his farming operations. Thereafter the classifier comes upon the land to classify it. As I say, Mr. President, he is under all sorts of constraints to classify it so that the man may have the land. But, Mr. President, while he is so, we all recognize that many of these classifiers are not actuated by a deep consideration for the welfare of the settler. Neither is he always appreciative of the burdens that the settler undertakes.

Mr. President, I here and now assert that there is no citizen in this country to whom it is so deeply indebted, to whom it owes so much, as the man who, with his wife and his children, endures the hardships of pioneer life in order to bring into cultivation hitherto valueless sections of land in the western country. No man deserves better of his country than does that man, and particularly no woman deserves better than the woman who accompanies him as his wife to make a home upon that land. Senators are sometimes not quite as regardful of these people, it seems to me, as they ought to be. Mr. President, I want you to assume the case of the man who, entirely confident in his own mind, entirely honest, desirous of securing no acre of public land under any law to which he is not entitled, goes upon that land, and makes his home upon it, builds his house, makes his residence there, moves his family upon the land, and does everything that is required by the law. Then the classifier comes along and classifies it as not subject to entry under the 640-acre homestead act; his action is approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and that man is turned out of house and home.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. KENDRICK. As I understand the law, such a man would not be denied the right to take a part of that land. I think he would be given the proportionate acreage under the other law.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator is in error about that. I think that if one contests his entry upon the ground that the land was not subject to entry under the act the contestor would have a 30 days' preference right to enter.

Mr. KENDRICK. Would it not be a contest only as to the character of the land, and not upon the question of the testimony presented?

Mr. WALSH. No; within the year, under the language of the bill before us, anyone may file a contest against his entry; and if in the contest it should be determined that the land is not of the character of land subject to entry under the 640-acre homestead act, but is subject to entry under the provisions of the 320-acre homestead act, the contestor would, as I understand, under the law have 30 days' right to his entry of 320 acres. I submit to the Senators from the West that if that condition of affairs should develop under this bill—and I can not see how it can be avoided—there would be hardships unspeakable worked upon honest and deserving settlers.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment longer?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. The very fact, in my judgment, that the locator upon this land faces that condition will restrain him from making affidavit that would be proved incorrect by an examination of the land; he would take a greater risk by so doing than he could afford to take. That is one of the safeguards of the measure, in my judgment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me for a moment, that undoubtedly is a safeguard, and naturally a settler would be a little bit cautious; but it is advisable to make allowance for the optimism of human nature. Here is a man who wants a 640-acre tract of land; he is extremely desirous of getting it, and naturally he will convince himself that it is of the character that is open to entry under the act. It is exactly the same with a mining prospector. He is always satisfied that he is entitled to the land. The Senator knows something about the character of controversies between the mineral claimant and the agricultural claimant. The mineral claimant always depreciates the value of the land for agricultural purposes; he says it has no agricultural value; that it is only mineral land; and he is perfectly satisfied to go on the land and make his development, confident that the decision must be that way. On the other hand, the agricultural claimant is naturally less appreciative of the value of land for mineral purposes, and is equally convinced that the classification must eventually be that it is agricultural land. So it will be with the man who desires to make entry of land under the 640-acre law; he will satisfy himself that there can be no classification except that which he thinks it ought to have, namely, one which will enable him to make the entry. Yet men will differ about the matter, and the appraiser or the classifier who is sent out from Washington—and the Senator from Wyoming recognizes how these gentlemen do business out in the West, with very little regard even to our views as to what classification ought to be given certain tracts of land—will make his classification and send his report for approbation to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior; and I undertake to say that many men who go upon these lands and expend money in their development in perfect good faith, but simply mistaken as to their character, will find themselves suffering severely.

Really, Mr. President, the proper solution of this matter is to get an adequate appropriation for the classification of these lands. Let us not invite, let us not solicit people to come and make entries upon these lands until they are classified, so that the Government can give assurance that as soon as a filing is accepted no man can be heard to assert that the land is not of the character that the 640-acre homestead act permits to be entered.

Now I gladly yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think the Senator has about covered the point that I wanted to make. I understood that he was in some controversy with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] as to what kind of a contest would originate. I think the Senator from Montana has covered the matter as fully as I would care to do, and, inasmuch as I hope to get a vote on the bill before 2 o'clock, I do not wish to take up any more time in discussing it.

Mr. WALSH. I have said all that I care to say upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understand that some one has sent for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING], who is temporarily out of the Chamber. I think the Senator ought to be present when the bill is voted upon.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin desires a record vote upon the passage of the bill; so I will ask that the yeas and nays be ordered on the question of its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, before the roll is called I wish to add just a few words to what I have already said.

Of course I am very much gratified to have the support of the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. It is always valuable and powerful. I am sorry, however, that the Senator should have indulged in some animadversions as to my attitude toward this bill, and I do not feel as though I could let this debate close without at least setting myself right in the Senator's eyes and in the eyes of the Senate.

The Senator is entirely mistaken when he says that I am not in sympathy with the West or its aspirations or its people. I am in the deepest sympathy with the West, as I am in the deepest sympathy with my own State, the people of my own State, the people of the United States, the people of every State in the Union. It has happened, of course, that I have differed with some of the western Senators on questions of policy; but that has been from no lack of sympathy on my part for the people of those States or the welfare of those States as I understand it, and I am doing my best to understand it. The men with whom I have not any sympathy are the men that I think are trying to exploit those States. It is because I have sympathy for the people of those States and the people that are going to inhabit those States at some time that I am opposing measures which I think are not for their welfare.

How much mistaken I may be is another question. My sympathy goes out to the pioneers of the States who go there to help upbuild the States; but my sympathy is not with those who go there to exploit the States, to take more than their fair share of the resources of the States. I have no sympathy with the men who are seeking special favors in those States; that expect to be treated far and away better than anybody else in those States.

That is my attitude. I say that this bill, in giving 640-acre homesteads in lands whether they are agricultural or not, in my judgment, gives too much in the first place. In the second place, I do not think a measure of this importance ought to be taken up and passed by way of snap judgment in a special session called for war purposes. In the third place, I do not think it ought to be taken up and passed at the close of the session, when it can not receive the consideration it deserves.

This is not like discussing a new proposition. The burden of proof is not on me to show that this is a bad bill. The burden of proof is upon the proponents of the measure to show that it is a good bill. When a certain policy has obtained in this country for a half a century and over, and Senators want to change that policy in the twinkling of an eye, it is not for me to show that the bill is a bad one. It is for them to show that the bill is a good one. The burden of proof is upon them to show that the present policy is wrong and ought to be overturned.

The Senator from Montana is entirely mistaken when he says that I was opposed to the original bill of 1916. I will confess that I voted for that bill in the committee with misgivings, and I only voted for it upon the representation of Senators in the committee that it was intended to apply to arid lands—to lands that were not fit for agriculture, to lands that were not susceptible of irrigation, and that it was necessary to having grazing homesteads in order to raise cattle on these tracts of land. I am opposed to it now because I see that that was merely an entering wedge for this bill, which wipes away all the safeguards with regard to agriculture and lands susceptible of irrigation, and goes right down to the nub of the matter, and says: "Let us have all 640-acre homesteads."

The Senator from Montana said that I had not shown any zeal in legislation looking toward a speedy survey of these lands. As I say, I voted with misgivings for the bill that was presented to me. Was it not for the Senators who proposed and championed the bill of 1916 to see that proper legislation was included in it to carry out the purposes of the bill? I will say to the Senator from Montana that if I had drawn that bill and had drawn it in good faith in order to get a speedy survey of the land, I would have seen to it that there was also put in it the means whereby to survey the land. But my zeal can not be very well excited when I see, in the light of later events, that it was never contemplated that we should have a speedy survey, otherwise it would have been put in the bill.

Now, whose fault is that?

Is it the fault of the proponents of the bill, who should have seen to it that the proper provisions were put in it for a speedy survey, or the fault of one who only acquiesced in it because he took the advice of others and surrendered his prejudice, if you want to call it so, against opening up these lands to 640-acre homesteads?

If that is what the trouble is, why is not a bill presented here to see that there is a speedy survey? I will say to the Senator from Montana that I will vote for such a bill as that, and I will further say to the Senator that if he and the other Senators on this committee will vote for it and support it I will introduce a bill the first thing in December providing for a speedy survey. I will do it gladly and cheerfully, and support it as best I can, in order to get this survey.

It could have been foreseen by the Senators who contend that they are so familiar with the situation out there that under the bill as they, not I, drew it these lands in the very nature of things could not be surveyed and certified. Why did they not put such a provision in there? They knew that presumably men would be anxious to take up these homesteads. Why was not the machinery provided to enable them to do so?

I say to my friend the Senator from Montana, for whom I have the highest respect, that it does seem to me that his remarks were somewhat gratuitous and in a way unjust. However we may differ on the bill, however we may differ on the policies to be adopted in the Western States, all I can say is that I am acting in accordance with my best judgment. I can not act with due respect for myself and act always according to the judgment of others. They have their duties to their States and I to mine. I cheerfully yield to Senators who do not come from my State the right to form their own judgment in regard to matters which affect my State, such as taxation, water power, and a great many other things of that kind. But while yielding to them the utmost freedom to form their own opinion, and without intimating or insinuating that I know more about the matter than they do, at the same time I propose to vote according to my convictions and exercise my own judgment in the best way that I can possibly do so, actuated only, as I am sure the other Senators are actuated, by a regard for what I conceive to be fair and right and with due regard to the welfare of the people not only of the States that they represent but of the country at large.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As he is out of the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Not being advised as to how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to ask if the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] on account of illness in his family. I also wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on account of illness in his family.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS. Has the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to know whether the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. HUSTING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] is necessarily detained on important public business.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 3, as follows:

YEAS—51.

So the bill was passed.

CONFIRMATION OF HON. CHARLES F. JOHNSON.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the appointment which has just been received from the President of the United States of Hon. Charles F. Johnson, a former Member of this body, to be United States circuit judge, first judicial circuit, be laid before the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed, as in executive session, to the consideration of the nomination of Charles F. Johnson, of Maine, as United States circuit judge. Is there objection?

Mr. FERNALD. It sometimes happens that when an exceedingly popular appointment has been made by the President it is the custom that it be confirmed in open session. I move at this time that the appointment of Mr. Johnson to be judge of the first judicial circuit be confirmed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to object, but I wish to say that I think the Senator is wrong about confirming some popular appointment. It has been done in reference to an ex-United States Senator; and this being the case, I make no objection. I am very glad to have favorable action taken in the case of Mr. Johnson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a nomination from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To be United States circuit judge, first judicial circuit, Charles F. Johnson, of Waterville, Me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

The nomination was unanimously confirmed.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be taken.

AMENDMENT OF NATURALIZATION LAWS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (S. 2854) to amend the naturalization laws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The Secretary read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "changing," to insert the words "the first paragraph of," so as to read:

That section 4 of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," is hereby amended by changing the first paragraph of the second subdivision, and by adding four subdivisions to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 11, to insert after the word "intention" the words "as that prescribed by the act of June 29, 1906," so as to read:

Second. Not less than three months nor more than seven years after he has made such declaration of intention as that prescribed by the act of June 29, 1906, he shall make and file, in duplicate, a petition in writing, signed by the applicant in his own handwriting and duly verified, in which petition such applicant shall state his full name, his place of residence (by street and number, if possible), his occupation, and, if possible, the date and place of his birth; the place from which he emigrated and the date and place of his arrival in the United States; and, if he entered through a port, the name of the vessel on which he arrived; the time when and the place and name of the court where he declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States; if he is married, he shall state the name of his wife and, if possible, the country of her nativity and her place of residence at the time of filing his petition; and, if he has children, the name, date, and place of birth and place of residence of each child living at the time of the filing of his petition.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this seems to be an important bill. I should like to have some information in regard to it. I am calling attention to it because it is perfectly manifest we are amending the bill here without any human being paying any attention to it unless it is the Senator in charge of the bill. I want to know something about the bill.

Mr. CALDER. I will be very glad to inform the Senator. The first change in the present law is provided on page 1, line 10, of the bill. The present law provides that after the alien files his declaration of intention he must wait two years before he can acquire complete citizenship. It is proposed to reduce this period to three months, without, however, in any other way changing the law as regards length of residence in the country and other requirements of citizenship. This bill, in its other provisions, aids the alien who holds an honorable discharge from the Army or Navy in obtaining his citizenship, and it also provides for immediate citizenship for those who have enlisted or are drafted for service in the present war.

Mr. REED. As I understand the Senator, the present law requires a probationary period of two years, during which period the immigrant is upon his good behavior and must satisfy the court that finally grants his naturalization of the fact that he has been well behaved, and that is to be reduced to three months, so that an alien can be made a full citizen of the United States within three months after he makes his first application. Is that correct?

Mr. CALDER. The Senator is correct, Mr. President. I might add, however, that the alien must have been here for at least five years and must pass the examination of the Naturalization Bureau of the Government. He must appear with citizens who know him for the period provided by the present law, and he must be examined by the court.

Mr. REED. How much do you extend the present period for first papers? Is it extended at all?

Mr. CALDER. No, sir; the bill does not disturb that. I will say to the Senator that the bill is very strongly advocated by the Department of Labor that has to do with such things from their observation of the working of the law. They believe the change a wise one.

I might also add that in the year previous to our going into the European war there was an unusually large number of applicants for citizenship who were desirous of becoming full American citizens, and this suggestion was prompted largely by that situation.

Mr. REED. In other words, we are passing this bill in order to accommodate those aliens who have concluded since the war began they want to become citizens?

Mr. CALDER. During the last two-year period something like 625,000 declarations were made for citizenship.

Mr. REED. That was before we got into the war?

Mr. CALDER. Yes. Now, it is the object to take care of those men, many of whom are anxious to enter our Army and Navy. It is to accommodate that situation.

Mr. REED. But those men can be admitted into the Army and Navy without being fully naturalized.

Mr. CALDER. They can not in the Navy, I will say to the Senator; they can be in the Army.

Mr. REED. They can be by changing the law in order to make them eligible to the Army and Navy. It is not necessary to make them eligible as voters.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator further on where a man enlists or proposes to enlist in the Army or the Navy or is drafted in the Army, provision is made in the bill that he may upon application, if passed upon as a fit subject for citizenship, be given immediate citizenship, whether he has been here five years or not.

Mr. REED. That takes care of that question. The question I am addressing myself to now is this: It is proposed by the committee that we shall reduce the period of naturalization so that after an alien has made his application for his first papers he can be made a full citizen within three months thereafter. That question is one which relates to citizenship alone; it has nothing to do with the Army or Navy or with the service of the country in the Army or Navy, because you take care of those later propositions further on in the bill.

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

Mr. REED. Now, what I want to ask the Senator is whether he was not one of the men who voted for the restrictive immigration bill?

Mr. CALDER. As a Member of the other House, I voted the other way.

Mr. REED. The committee that reported this bill in the Senate is the same committee that reported the restrictive immigration bill, is it not?

Mr. CALDER. I think so.

Mr. REED. The same committee that came here and made speeches lasting something like 90 days declaring that our country was menaced by an influx of foreigners who came here and received citizenship before they were qualified for citizenship now presents a bill proposing to reduce the period of naturalization by some 21 months, and having arrived at that, I want to ask why need they formally take out any second papers at all if only 90 days are to elapse between the first and second papers? Why not grant the papers on one application?

Mr. CALDER. I presume the reason for the 90 days is for the purpose of investigation. Notice is given that an applicant has filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen; the court knows it and the Bureau of Naturalization knows it, and they have an opportunity to investigate the man.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator regard this as a war measure?

Mr. CALDER. I think it can fairly be said it is a war measure. I think undoubtedly every provision of the bill, with the possible exception of the first provision, can fairly be said to be a war measure.

I might add that I have a number of letters here from men who have read the provisions of the bill. I have one from a man who tells of the difficulties he has suffered in an effort to obtain citizenship. He tells of having served 17 years in the British Army and his wish to enter the Army of the United States. He has lived in this country seven years. He has filed his application for citizenship and will have to wait two years before he can become a citizen.

Mr. REED. If he has been here for seven years he could be a full-fledged citizen by this time if he acted promptly.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that this provision is heartily recommended by the Department of Labor. In fact, I may say this particular provision in the bill is their provision. It is not my suggestion, in the first instance; but from the operation of the law, from their experience with it, they think it is a very proper provision, and for that reason I incorporated it in the bill.

Mr. REED. The "Department of Labor" is a very useful term. It may and it may not mean anything. I have a great deal of respect for the Secretary of Labor, but I do not think he knows anything more about the workings of the naturalization law by virtue of his position in the Department of Labor than any Member of Congress might know by virtue of his position. What is meant by the "Department of Labor" I do not know. It may mean any one of the young gentlemen who are working in the department at a salary and who are, of course, very necessary for the service. If there is any one lesson our country ought to have learned out of present conditions it is the fact that we ought to be careful about conferring the right of citizenship, more careful in the future than we have been in the past. It seems to me that this is an exceedingly bad time for making it easy for men to become citizens of this country.

So far as caring for the rights of those who may enter our Army to fight for our country is concerned, I have very great sympathy with that proposition, but I am simply astounded that a bill should be brought in at this time proposing to break down the safeguards that have heretofore existed and which have been intended to protect our electorate against an influx of those who have not yet established their loyalty to the Government and their fitness for citizenship.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smoot
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Sutherland
Curtis	Kendrick	Polindexter	Underwood
Fall	Kenyon	Reed	Vardaman
Fernald	King	Robinson	Wadsworth
France	Lewis	Shafroth	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard	Weeks
Gerry	McNary	Shields	Wolcott
Gore	New	Smith, Ariz.
Hardwick	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Husting	Norris	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] on account of illness in his family.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. PAGE, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. LEWIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], occasioned by illness in their respective families.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a very important measure; some of us have not had time to consider it, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not subject to discussion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, October 2, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate October 1, 1917.

CIRCUIT JUDGE, FIRST JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Charles F. Johnson, of Waterville, Me., to be United States circuit judge, first judicial circuit, vice William L. Putnam, resigned.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate October 1, 1917.

Charles F. Johnson to be United States circuit judge, first judicial circuit.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, October 1, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, look down, we beseech Thee, from Thy throne of grace upon this weary, warring, suffering, sorrowing world, with pitying love; and arouse within the hearts of Thy children the better angels of our nature; and bring order out of chaos, harmony out of discord, peace out of war, love out of hate, righteousness out of unrighteousness; that brotherly love may have its sway; that the universal prayer which has come down through the ages may be answered: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as in heaven." In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, September 29, 1917, was read and approved.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent in order to-day be transferred from to-day until to-morrow and that the business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent be considered to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business in order to-day on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent be transferred to to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether he intends to take up the report of the conference committee on the revenue bill to-day; and if so, whether he expects to give the House an opportunity to debate it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do. I am making this request for that purpose, so that we can go immediately into the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MADDEN. What amount of debate is expected to be given to the conference report?

Mr. KITCHIN. There will be no disposition on my part to curtail debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman willing, if necessary, to give the day to it?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, if it is necessary; but I do not think it will be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2932. An act to guard the military and naval forces from the physical and moral injuries of commercialized prostitution;

S. 2917. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes";

S. 2922. An act to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes; and

S. 2719. An act to permit the reenlistment of Omer G. Paquet in the United States Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, with accompanying conference papers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2816. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River;

S. 2823. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin; and

S. 2813. An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the Bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that, on September 29, 1917, they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 5431. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark.; and

H. R. 4960. An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the conference report upon the bill H. R. 4280, the revenue bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up the conference report upon the revenue bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 172).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 36, 38, 43, 49, 65, 71, 77, 78, 80, 123, 126, 127, 128, 129, 131, 133, 135, 136, 137, 141, 149, 151, 168, 172, 188, 190, 193,

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 41, 42, 47, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 61, 66, 72, 76, 83, 84, 85, 86, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 124, 125, 130, 132, 134, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 145, 148, 150, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 162, 163, 164, 166, 169, 174, 175, 176, 179, 180, 181, 182, 185, 189, 191, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 201, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 275, 283, 289, 290, and 298, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "and (c) the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 9 of such act, as amended by this act, requiring the normal tax of individuals on income derived from interest to be deducted and withheld at the source of the income shall not apply to the new 2 per cent normal tax prescribed in section 1 of this act until on and after January 1, 1918, and thereafter only one 2 per cent normal tax shall be deducted and withheld at the source under the provisions of such subdivision (c), and any further normal tax for which the recipient of such income is liable under this act or such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, shall be paid by such recipient"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert on page 64 of the engrossed Senate amendments, after line 6, the following:

"(2) That section 5 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of subdivision (a) a further paragraph, numbered 9, to read as follows:

"9. Contributions or gifts actually made within the year to corporations or associations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, to an amount not in excess of 15 per cent of the taxpayer's taxable net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 200. That when used in this title—

"The term 'corporation' includes joint-stock companies or associations and insurance companies;

"The term 'domestic' means created under the law of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, and the term 'foreign' means created under the law of any other possession of the United States or of any foreign country or government;

"The term 'United States' means only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia;

"The term 'taxable year' means the 12 months ending December 31, excepting in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, in which case it means such fiscal year. The first taxable year shall be the year ending December 31, 1917, except that in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, it shall be the fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1917. If a corporation or partnership, prior to March 1, 1918, makes a return covering its own fiscal year, and includes therein the income received during that part of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1916, the tax for such taxable year shall be that proportion of the tax computed upon the net income during such full fiscal year which the time from January 1, 1917, to the end of such fiscal year bears to the full fiscal year; and

"The term 'prewar period' means the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, or, if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in a trade or business during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of which the corporation or partnership was in existence or the individual was engaged in the trade or business.

"The terms 'trade' and 'business' include professions and occupations.

"The term 'net income' means in the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, the net income received from sources within the United States.

"SEC. 201. That in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the income of every corporation, partnership, or individual, a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax) equal to the following percentages of the net income:

"Twenty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the deduction (determined as hereinafter provided) and not in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year;

"Twenty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 per cent and not in excess of 20 per cent of such capital;

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent and not in excess of 25 per cent of such capital;

"Forty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 25 per cent and not in excess of 33 per cent of such capital; and

"Sixty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 33 per cent of such capital.

"For the purpose of this title every corporation or partnership not exempt under the provisions of this section shall be deemed to be engaged in business, and all the trades and businesses in which it is engaged shall be treated as a single trade or business, and all its income from whatever source derived shall be deemed to be received from such trade or business.

"This title shall apply to all trades or businesses of whatever description, whether continuously carried on or not, except—

"(a) In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees;

"(b) Corporations exempt from tax under the provisions of section 11 of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, and partnerships and individuals carrying on or doing the same business, or coming within the same description; and

"(c) Incomes derived from the business of life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan.

"SEC. 202. That the tax shall not be imposed in the case of the trade or business of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, the net income of which trade or business during the taxable year is less than $3,000.

"SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title the deduction shall be as follows, except as otherwise in this title provided—

"(a) In the case of a domestic corporation, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $3,000;

"(b) In the case of a domestic partnership or of a citizen or resident of the United States, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $6,000;

"(c) In the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or of a nonresident alien individual, an amount ascertained in the same manner as provided in subdivisions (a) and (b), without any exemption of $3,000 or $6,000.

"(d) If the Secretary of the Treasury is unable satisfactorily to determine the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period, the deduction shall be determined in the same manner as provided in section 205.

"SEC. 204. That if a corporation or partnership was not in existence, or an individual was not engaged in the trade or business, during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, the deduction shall be an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year, plus in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000.

"A trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership, or individual, although formally organized or reorganized on or after January 2, 1913, which is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, shall, for the purposes of this title, be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of its predecessor prior to that date shall be deemed to have been its net income and invested capital.

"SEC. 205. (a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period a domestic corporation or partnership, or a citizen or resident of the United States, had no net income from the trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the percentage, which the net income was of the invested capital, was low as compared with the percentage, which the net income during such period of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, was of their invested capital, then the deduction shall be the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of its invested capital for the taxable year which the average deduction (determined in the same manner as provided in section 203, without including the $3,000 or $6,000 therein referred to) for such year of representative corporations, partnerships, or individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, is of their average invested capital for such year plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000.

"The percentage which the net income was of the invested capital in each trade or business shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, the percentage determined by the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used.

"(b) The tax shall be assessed upon the basis of the deduction determined as provided in section 203, but the taxpayer claiming the benefit of this section may at the time of making the return file a claim for abatement of the amount by which the tax so assessed exceeds a tax computed upon the basis of the deduction determined as provided in this section. In such event, collection of the part of the tax covered by such claim for abatement shall not be made until the claim is decided, but if in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the interests of the United States would be jeopardized thereby he may require the claimant to give a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the commissioner may think wise to safeguard such interests, conditioned for the payment of any tax found to be due, with the interest thereon, and if such bond, satisfactory to the commissioner, is not given within such time as he prescribes, the full amount of tax assessed shall be collected and the amount overpaid, if any, shall upon final decision of the application be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

"SEC. 206. That for the purposes of this title the net income of a corporation shall be ascertained and returned (a) for the calendar years 1911 and 1912 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section 38 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 5, 1909, except that income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States shall be included; (b) for the calendar year 1913 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section II of the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913, except that income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States shall be included, and except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by section II of such act of October 3, 1913, shall be deducted; and (c) for the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of the act entitled 'An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes,' approved September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, shall be deducted.

"The net income of a partnership or individual shall be ascertained and returned for the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, and for the taxable year, upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, except that the credit allowed by subdivision (b) of section 5 of such act shall be deducted. There shall be allowed (a) in the case of a domestic partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 5 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act; and (b) in the case of a foreign partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 6 of such act as amended by this act.

"Sec. 207. That as used in this title, the term 'invested capital' for any year means the average invested capital for the year, as defined and limited in this title, averaged monthly. As used in this title 'invested capital' does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title, nor money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

"(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in; (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January 1, 1914, the actual cash value of such property as of January 1, 1914, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year. Provided, That (a) the actual cash value of patents and copyrights paid in for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment, shall be included as invested capital, but not to exceed the par value of such stock or shares at the time of such payment, and (b) the good will, trade-marks, trade brands, the franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, shall be included as invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, the value of such good will, trade-mark, trade brand, franchise, or intangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment; but good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, bona fide purchased, prior to March 3, 1917, for and with interests or shares in a partnership or for and with shares in the capital stock of a corporation (issued prior to March 3, 1917), in an amount not to exceed, on March 3, 1917, 20 per cent of the total interests or shares in the partnership or of the total shares of the capital stock of the corporation, shall be included in invested capital at a value not to exceed the actual cash value at the time of such purchase, and in case of issue of stock therefor not to exceed the par value of such stock;

"(b) In the case of an individual: (1) actual cash paid into the trade or business, and (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid into the trade or business, other than cash, at the time of such payment; (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January 1, 1914, the actual cash value of such property as of January 1, 1914), and (3) the actual cash value of patents, copyrights, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, or other intangible property, paid into the trade or business, at the time of such payment, if payment was made therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property bona fide paid therefor at the time of such payment.

"In the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or of a nonresident alien individual the term 'invested capital' means that proportion of the entire invested capital, as defined and limited in this title, which the net income from sources within the United States bears to the entire net income.

"Sec. 208. That in case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business of 50 per cent or more remains in control of the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received, unless such asset was paid for specifically as such, in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment.

"Sec. 209. That in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital there shall be levied, assessed, collected and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deductions: In the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000; in the case of all other trades or businesses, no deduction.

"Sec. 210. That if the Secretary of the Treasury is unable in any case satisfactorily to determine the invested capital, the amount of the deduction shall be the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same proportion of the net income of the trade or business received during the taxable year as the proportion which the average deduction (determined in the same manner as provided in section 203, without including the $3,000 or $6,000 therein referred to) for the same calendar year of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to the total net income of the trade or business received by such corporations, partnerships, and individuals, plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States, $6,000.

"For the purpose of this section the proportion between the deduction and the net income in each trade or business shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, the proportion determined for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used.

"Sec. 211. That every foreign partnership having a net income of $3,000 or more for the taxable year, and every domestic partnership having a net income of $6,000 or more for the taxable year, shall render a correct return of the income of the trade or business for the taxable year, setting forth specifically the gross income for such year, and the deductions allowed in this title. Such returns shall be rendered at the same time and in the same manner as is prescribed for income-tax returns under Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act.

"Sec. 212. That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal-revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this title and to the tax herein imposed, and all provisions of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, relating to returns and payment of the tax therein imposed, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the tax imposed by this title.

"Sec. 213. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any corporation, partnership, or individual, subject to the provisions of this title, to furnish him with such facts, data, and information as in his judgment are necessary to collect the tax imposed by this title.

"Sec. 214. That Title II (secs. 200 to 207, inclusive) of the act entitled 'An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy, and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1917, is hereby repealed.

"Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed by such Title II, shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax the excess shall be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

"Subdivision (1) of section 301 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended so that the rate of tax for the taxable year 1917 shall be 10 per cent instead of 12½ per cent, as therein provided.

"Subdivision (2) of such section is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(2) This section shall cease to be of effect on and after January 1, 1918."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 301: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 301, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "X" inserted by said amendment insert the figures "XI"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 303: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 303, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and, on page 59, line 20, of the bill strike out the figures "1200" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1100"; also in the matter restored by said amendment, on page 59, line 21, of the bill strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty." In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "Sec. 1000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 304: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 304, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 1101. That on and after July 1, 1918, the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter (including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year) when sent by the publisher thereof from the post office of publication or other post office, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale:

"(a) In the case of the portion of such publication devoted to matter other than advertisements, shall be as follows: (1) On and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof; (2) on and after July 1, 1919, 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof.

"(b) In the case of the portion of such publication devoted to advertisements the rates per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the several zones applicable to fourth-class matter shall be as follows (but where the space devoted to advertisements does not exceed 5 per cent of the total space, the rate of postage shall be the same as if the whole of such publication was devoted to matter other than advertisements: (1) On and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 1½ cents; for the fourth zone, 2 cents; for the fifth zone, 2½ cents; for the sixth zone, 2½ cents; for the seventh zone, 3 cents; for the eighth zone, 3½ cents; (2) on and after July 1, 1919, and until July 1, 1920, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 2 cents; for the fourth zone, 3 cents; for the fifth zone, 3½ cents; for the sixth zone, 4 cents; for the seventh zone, 5 cents; for the eighth zone, 5½ cents; (3) on and after July 1, 1920, and until July 1, 1921, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 2½ cents; for the fourth zone, 4 cents; for the fifth zone, 4½ cents; for the sixth zone, 5½ cents; for the seventh zone, 7 cents; for the eighth zone, 7½ cents; (4) on and after July 1, 1921, for the first and second zones, 2 cents; for the third zone, 3 cents; for the fourth zone, 5 cents; for the fifth zone, 6 cents; for the sixth zone, 7 cents; for the seventh zone, 9 cents; for the eighth zone, 10 cents;

"(c) With the first mailing of each issue of each such publication, the publisher shall file with the postmaster a copy of such issue, together with a statement containing such information as the Postmaster General may prescribe for determining the postage chargeable thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 305: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 305, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and on page 61, line 15, of the bill, strike out the figures "1202" and insert the figures "1102"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 306: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 306, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 1103. That in the case of newspapers and periodicals entitled to be entered as second-class matter and maintained by and in the interest of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations or associations, not organized for profit and none of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, the second-class postage rates shall be, irrespective of the zone in which delivered (except when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, in which case the rates shall be the same as now provided by law), 1½ cents a pound or fraction thereof on and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, and on and after July 1, 1919, 1½ cents a pound or fraction thereof. The publishers of such newspapers or periodicals before being entitled to the foregoing rates shall furnish to the Postmaster General, at such times and under such conditions as he may prescribe, satisfactory evidence that none of the net income of such organization inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 307: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 307, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 1104. That where the total weight of any one edition or issue of any publication mailed to any one zone does not exceed 1 pound, the rate of postage shall be 1 cent."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 308: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 308, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 1105. The zone rates provided by this title shall relate to the entire bulk mailed to any one zone and not to individually addressed packages."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 309: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 309, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 63, line 1, of the bill in lieu of the figures "1206" insert the figures "1106"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 310: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 310, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 63, line 5, of the bill in lieu of the figures "1207" insert the figures "1107"; also on the same page of the bill, line 9, strike out the words "and second"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 311: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 311, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 1108. That the salaries of postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third classes shall not be increased after July 1, 1917, during the existence of the present war. The compensation of postmasters at offices of the fourth class shall continue to be computed on the basis of the present rates of postage."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 312: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 312, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 1109. That where postmasters at offices of the third class have been since May 1, 1917, or hereafter are granted leave without pay for military purposes, the Postmaster General may allow, in addition to the maximum amounts which may now be allowed such offices for clerk hire, in accordance with law, an amount not to exceed 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 313: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 313, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the figures "1002" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1110"; in line 9 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "proviso" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section"; and in line 13 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "bona fide"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 314: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 314, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

(1) In the first line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the figures "XI" and insert the figures "XII."

(2) In the second line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the figures "1100" and insert the figures "1200."

(3) On page 61 of the engrossed Senate amendments strike out all beginning with the colon in line 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment through the word "years," in line 17, page 62, and on page 73 of said engrossed amendments strike out all after the word "title," in line 5, through the word "years," in line 25, and in lieu of the matter thus stricken out insert the following on page 85 of said engrossed amendments after line 25:

"SEC. 31. (a) That the term 'dividends' as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income, to the amount of the earnings or profits so distributed.

"(b) Any distribution made to the shareholders or members of a corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, in the year 1917, or subsequent tax years, shall be deemed to have been made from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, and shall constitute a part of the annual income of the distributee for the year in which received, and shall be taxed to the distributee at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which such profits or surplus were accumulated by the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, but nothing herein shall be construed as taxing any earnings or profits accrued prior to March 1, 1913, but such earnings or profits may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the distribution of earnings and profits accrued since March 1, 1913, has been made. This subdivision shall not apply to any distribution made prior to August 6, 1917, out of earnings or profits accrued prior to March 1, 1913."

(4) On page 63 of said engrossed amendments, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "connection with" and insert the words "the act authorizing."

(5) On page 63 of said engrossed amendments, line 19, strike out the figures "1101" and insert the figures "1201."

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: The Senate limited the effectiveness of the additional individual normal tax to "during the present war"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment limits the 2 per cent additional individual normal tax to citizens or residents of the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: The Senate limited the effectiveness of the additional surtaxes to "during the present war"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 4: The Senate increased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $15,000 and $20,000 from 5 to 6 per cent; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 5: The Senate increased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $20,000 and $40,000 from 6 to 8 per cent. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment making the rate 7 per cent.

On amendment No. 6: The Senate increased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $60,000 and $80,000 from 13.75 to 14 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 7: The Senate increased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $80,000 and $100,000 from 17.5 to 18 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 8: The Senate increased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $100,000 and $150,000 from 21.25 to 22 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 9: The Senate increased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $250,000 and $300,000 from 33.75 to 34 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: The Senate decreased the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $300,000 and $500,000 from 37.5 to 37 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 11: The House bill provided that the additional surtax on the portion of net income between $500,000 and $1,000,000 should be 41.25 per cent, and that the additional surtax on the portion of net income in excess of $1,000,000 should be 45 per cent. The Senate amendment provides that the additional surtax shall be 40 per cent on the portion of income between $500,000 and $750,000, 45 per cent on the portion of net income between $750,000 and $1,000,000, and 50 per cent on the portion of the net income in excess of $1,000,000; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 17: The House bill provided that the normal tax of individuals to be deducted and withheld at the source of the income should not apply to the new 2 per cent normal tax until on and after January 1, 1918; and that thereafter should apply only to incomes exceeding $3,000. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that the normal tax of individuals on the income derived from interest from bonds containing the tax-free covenant provision shall be deducted and withheld at the source of the income and providing that this provision shall not apply to the new 2 per cent normal tax until on and after January 1, 1918.

The effect of this provision and the withholding amendment to the income-tax title is to require the withholding of only 2 per cent upon the income from the corporate bonds.

On amendments Nos. 18 and 19: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 20: The House bill provided an additional 2 per cent levy on corporate net income. The Senate increased the additional tax on corporate net income to 4 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 27: The House bill proposed the levy of an additional income tax equivalent to 33 1/3 per cent of the tax paid by individuals, corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations, or insurance companies upon their net incomes received during the calendar year 1916. The Senate eliminated this provision, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: The House bill provided that on and after January 1, 1918, partnerships, withholding agents, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies, liable for the payment of income, munitions, or excess-profits taxes, under existing law or under this act, should pay without levy, assessment, or notice, simultaneously with the submission of their return of tax, the amount of tax for the payment of which they were liable under their tax return. The House provision also provided that individuals subject to the additional taxes commonly known as surtaxes should pay without levy, assessment, or notice, simultaneously with the submission of their return of tax the amount for which they were liable under their income-tax return. The Senate struck out this provision and substituted a new provision which is fully explained under amendment No. 299; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 29: The House bill authorized collectors of internal revenue to receive uncertified checks in payment of income, munitions, and excess-profits taxes. The Senate struck out the House provision and substituted a similar provision which is fully explained under amendment No. 300; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 30: This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 31, 32, 33, and 34: These amendments provide that the provisions of Title I of this act shall not extend to Porto Rico and provide that the Porto Rican Legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter modify or repeal the income-tax laws in force in Porto Rico; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 35: This amendment allows a deduction in computing net income under the income tax of such amount, not to exceed 15 per cent of the taxpayer's taxable net income, as the taxpayer contributes during the taxable year to corporations or associations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment transferring this provision to the income-tax title incorporating this deduction in the income-tax section relating to deductions to be allowed in computing net income.

On amendment No. 36: This amendment changed the title of Title II of the bill from "War excess-profits tax" to "War-profits tax." The Senate recedes from its amendment making the title "War excess-profits tax."

On amendment No. 37: The House bill levied an excess-profits tax in addition to the excess-profits tax now upon the statute books of 8 per cent upon the net income of corporations and partnerships in excess of 8 per cent of the capital actually invested, and an additional exemption of $5,000. The Senate struck out the House provision and substituted therefor a war-profits tax providing graduated rates, ranging from 12 to 60 per cent upon incomes of corporations, partnerships, and individuals in excess of their respective average incomes during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913. The Senate provision, however, limited the exemption to an amount not less than 6 nor more than 10 per cent of the actual capital invested.

The Senate provision also provided that if the exemption on the basis of the prewar period (the average income for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913) allowed corporations, partnerships, and individuals in any individual case did not represent the deductions allowed representative concerns engaged in similar businesses, that the Secretary of the Treasury could allow an exemption in such cases equal to the same proportion of their net income for the taxable year that the deduction granted representative concerns was of the net income for the taxable year of such concerns, provided that the exemptions granted should not be less than 6 nor more than 10 per cent of the actual capital invested.

The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment levying an excess-profits tax upon the excess profits of corporations, partnerships, and individuals ranging from 20 to 60 per cent. In arriving at the excess profits, an exemption from the net income as shown by the income-tax returns of not less than 7 nor more than 9 per cent of the actual capital invested is to be allowed. In addition to this exemption, all domestic partnerships and citizens or residents of the United States are to be allowed a flat exemption of $6,000 and all domestic corporations a flat exemption of $3,000.

On amendment No. 38: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 39: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 40: The House bill levied an additional tax of $1.10 per proof gallon or wine gallon when below proof, on distilled spirits regardless of the purpose for which withdrawn. The Senate increased the additional tax on such spirits when withdrawn for beverage purposes to $2.10 per proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, and provided that the additional tax on such spirits when withdrawn for other purposes should be the same as the tax provided in the House bill; and the House recedes with an amendment placing the additional $2.10 tax also upon spirits withdrawn for use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment levies an additional customs tax of $1.10 per wine gallon upon all perfumes hereafter imported into the United States containing distilled spirits; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 43: This amendment provided for the imposition of an additional tax of $60 per 100 pounds on all grains, cereals, and other solid products and materials, and an additional tax of $5 per wine gallon on all molasses, sirups, and other liquid fermented products and materials; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment provides that no distilled spirits produced after the passage of this act shall be imported into the United States, except from the West Indian Islands recently acquired from Denmark, and in this case only when produced from products the growth of such islands. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment changing the word "enactment" to "passage" and changing the section number.

On amendment No. 45: The purpose of this amendment is to facilitate the handling of distilled spirits under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the House recedes, with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment is a modification of section 3283 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. Section 3283 requires distilleries to stop manufacturing distilled spirits at 11 o'clock p. m. on Saturday and to resume not earlier than 1 a. m. on Monday. At the present time the War Department needs probably all of the ethyl alcohol that can be produced; and the purpose of the amendment is to amend the law so that the work can be continuous. The Senate provision exempted, from the provisions of section 3283 of the Revised Statutes, the manufacture, warehousing, withdrawal, and shipment of ethyl alcohol for use of the United States or for denaturation. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment, with an amendment exempting from the provisions of the present law the manufacture, warehousing, withdrawal, and shipment of ethyl alcohol for other than beverage purposes.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment is a modification of section 3285 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. That section specifies 72 hours as the fermenting period at sweet-mash distilleries and had its origin a good many years ago, but under the present improved method of distillation and production no more than 48 hours are required for that purpose. Therefore there is a loss of 24 hours. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended the change for the purpose of supplying the Government needs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 48: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes, with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 49: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 50: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 51: The House bill levied a tax of $1.10 on each proof-gallon or wine-gallon when below proof of distilled spirits held on the day this act is passed by a retailer in a quantity in excess of 50 gallons in the aggregate, or by any other person, corporation, partnership, or association, in any quantity and regardless of the use intended to be made of such spirits. The Senate amended this provision, increasing the rate to $2.10 per proof-gallon for such spirits intended for sale for beverage purposes and left the rate at $1.10 for such spirits intended for other uses than beverage purposes; and the House recedes, with an amendment placing the additional $2.10 tax also upon such spirits intended for use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage.

On amendments Nos. 52 and 53: These amendments place the floor tax upon distilled spirits upon the proof gallon only; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 54 and 55: The House bill provided that the tax on distilled spirits in the custody of a court of bankruptcy in insolvency proceedings at the time of the passage of this act shall be paid by the person to whom the court delivers such distilled spirits at the time of such delivery. The Senate amended this provision limiting it to distilled spirits in the custody of a court of bankruptcy in insolvency proceeding on June 1, 1917, and provided further that the person paying the tax should have an exemption of 50 gallons; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 56: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes, with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendments Nos. 57 and 58: These amendments change the basis for levying the tax upon rectified spirits from the wine gallon, as provided by the House bill, to the proof gallon; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 59: This amendment provides that the tax on rectified spirits shall not apply to gin produced by the redistillation of a pure spirit over juniper berries and other aromatics. The House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment changing the word "enacted" to "passed."

On amendment No. 60: The House bill provided a penalty of not less than $500 and imprisonment not more than two years for any violation of the provisions relating to rectified spirits. The Senate amended the provision by providing a penalty of not less than $250 and not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than two years. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment fixing the penalty at not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than two years.

On amendment No. 61: The House bill provided that any person violating any provisions of the section relating to rectified spirits should in addition to the fine imposed be liable to double the tax evaded, the same to be recovered together with the tax on any bond given by him as rectifier. The Senate amended the provision by providing that any person violating such provisions should be subject, in addition to the fine imposed, to double the tax evaded, together with the tax, to be collected by assessment or on any given bond; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 62: The purpose of this amendment is to do away with the use of the following useless and unnecessary stamps: Distillery warehouse, special bonded warehouse, special bonded rewarehouse, general bonded warehouse, general bonded retransfer, transfer brandy, export tobacco, export cigars, export oleomargarine, and export fermented liquor stamps. The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 63: The purpose of this amendment is to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to require installation of additional meters, tanks, pipes, or other apparatus, if he deems such installations necessary in order to properly safeguard the revenue; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 64: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 65: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 66: The House bill provided that the additional tax upon fermented liquors should be $1.25 for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons. The Senate increased this tax to $1.50 per barrel, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 67: The purpose of this amendment is to permit the saving of the residue from distillation at industrial distilleries and the manufacture therefrom of beverages containing not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume; and the House recedes with an amendment making certain minor clerical changes.

On amendment No. 68: The House bill doubled the tax now levied upon all wines except those containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol. The House bill increased the tax upon wines containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol an additional 2 cents per wine gallon. The Senate doubled the tax upon wines containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol and provided an additional tax upon wines containing more than 14 per cent of alcohol and not fortified with grape brandy of $1.10 per proof gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment levying an additional tax upon all still wine, including vermouth, and upon all champagne and other sparkling wines, liqueurs, cordials, artificial and other imitation wines or compounds sold as wine equal to the tax now imposed by law.

On amendments Nos. 69 and 70: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes with amendments changing the section numbers.

On amendment No. 71: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 72: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 73: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 74: The House bill provided that the tax upon grape brandy or wine spirits be 10 cents per proof gallon in addition to the tax now levied by law. The Senate increased this additional tax to $1 per proof gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, with an amendment making the additional tax levied upon grape brandy or wine spirits 20 cents per proof gallon.

On amendment No. 75: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 76: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 78: The House bill provided an additional tax upon sweet wines held for sale by the producer upon the passage of this act equivalent to 10 cents per proof gallon upon the grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of such wine. The Senate increased this additional tax to $1 per proof gallon, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 79: The House bill levied an additional tax of 10 cents per proof gallon upon grape brandy or wine spirits withdrawn by the producer of sweet wines for the purpose of fortifying such wines and not so used prior to the passage of this act. The Senate increased this tax to $1 per proof gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making this additional tax 20 cents per proof gallon.

On amendment No. 80: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 81: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 82: The House bill levied a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which all prepared sirups or extracts (intended for use in the manufacture or production of beverages, commonly known as soft drinks, by soda fountains, bottling establishments, and other similar places) are sold by the manufacturers, producers, or importers. The Senate struck out the House tax and substituted in lieu thereof graduated rates upon such sirups or extracts, ranging from 3 cents per gallon upon such sirups or extracts when sold for not more than $1.25 per gallon to a tax of 12 cents per gallon when such sirups or extracts are sold for more than $4 per gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment adopting the Senate classification and increasing the rate to 5 cents per gallon upon such sirups or extracts when sold for not more than $1.30 per gallon, and graduating the other rates so that the tax levied upon such sirups or extracts when sold for more than $4 per gallon will be 20 cents per gallon.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 84: The House bill provided a tax of 2 cents per gallon upon ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, and other carbonated waters or beverages manufactured or sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of the carbonic acid gas used in carbonating the same, and upon all unfermented grape juice, soft drinks, or artificial mineral waters (not carbonated), and fermented liquors containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol; the Senate reduced this tax to 1 cent per gallon; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 85: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 86: The House bill provided a tax of 8 cents per pound upon all carbonic acid gas in drums or other containers intended for use in the manufacture or production of carbonated water or other drinks sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer. The Senate struck out this provision and substituted a new section, which will be explained under amendment No. 88; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 87: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes, with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 88: The Senate reduced the tax upon carbonic acid gas in drums or other containers (intended for use in the manufacture or use of carbonated waters or other drinks) to 5 cents per pound and provided that this tax should be paid by the purchaser to the vendor and collected, returned, and paid to the United States by the vendor; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendments Nos. 89 and 90: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 91 to 108, inclusive: These amendments relate to the tax upon cigars. The House bill provided the following rates upon cigars made of tobacco or any substitute therefor and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand: If manufactured or imported to retail at not more than 4 cents each, 50 cents per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 4 cents and not more than 6 cents each, $1 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 6 cents and not more than 10 cents each, $2 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 10 cents and not more than 15 cents each, $4 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents and not more than 20 cents each, $5 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each and not more than 25 cents each, $7 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 25 cents each, $10 per thousand. The Senate changed the cigar classification and rates as follows: If manufactured or imported to retail at 4 cents or more each and not more than 7 cents each, $1 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 7 cents each and not more than 15 cents each, $3 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents each and not more than 20 cents each, $5 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each, $7 per thousand; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 109: This amendment makes the administrative provision relating to cigars apply to the importer; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 110: The House bill provided that the manufacturer should affix to each box or container of cigars a conspicuous label indicating the maximum retail price of each cigar. The Senate changed this provision to apply to the importer as well as the manufacturer and requires each to indicate on each box or container of cigars by letter the class of this section under which the cigars therein contained have been tax paid; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 111: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 112: The House bill levied an additional tax of $1.25 per thousand upon cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand. The Senate reduced this tax to 75 cents per thousand. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making this tax 80 cents per thousand.

On amendment No. 113: This amendment levies an additional tax of $1.20 per thousand upon cigarettes weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 114: The House bill authorized the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to provide the dies and stamps for cigars and cigarettes necessary under the taxes in effect and the sizes of packages authorized after the provisions of this act take effect. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue already has ample authority to do the act specified; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 115 to 120, inclusive: These amendments relate to the sizes of packages in which cigarettes may be put up; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 121: The House bill levied an additional tax upon manufactured tobacco and snuff of 8 cents per pound. The Senate reduced this tax to 4 cents per pound. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making the additional tax 5 cents per pound.

On amendment No. 122: This amendment relates to the date of effectiveness of the additional taxes upon cigars, cigarettes, manufactured tobacco and snuff, and cigarette papers. The Senate made these taxes effective upon the passage of the act. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making the aforementioned taxes effective 30 days after the passage of this act.

On amendment No. 123: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 124: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 125 to 131, inclusive: The House bill allowed the following exemptions from the floor-stock tax levied under the provisions of this act upon manufactured tobacco and snuff, cigars and cigarettes: One thousand pounds of manufactured tobacco and snuff and 20,000 cigars or cigarettes. The House bill only allowed these exemptions to each person, corporation, partnership, or association. The Senate reduced the House exemptions as follows: One hundred pounds of manufactured tobacco and snuff, 500 cigars, and 1,000 cigarettes, but provided that the exemptions should apply to each place of business; and the Senate recedes from its amendments providing that the exemptions should apply to each place of business, and the House recedes from its amendments Nos. 125 and 130 making the exemption from the floor-stock tax 100 pounds of manufactured tobacco and snuff and 1,000 cigars or cigarettes.

On amendment No. 132: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 133: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 134: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 135: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 136: The House bill provided for an additional levy of a tax equal to one-half the additional taxes levied upon cigars, cigarettes, manufactured tobacco, and snuff, removed from factory or customhouse after the passage of this act but prior to the time when the additional taxes become effective. The Senate struck out this provision; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 137: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 138: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 139: The House bill levied a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent on each book or set of cigarette papers containing not more than 25 papers. The Senate struck out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 140: The House bill provided that the tax upon cigarette papers, made up into packages, books, sets, or tubes should be paid by stamps affixed by the person, corporation, partnership, or association making up or importing the cigarette packages, books, sets, or tubes. The Senate struck out this provision. The effect of this action is to allow the tax to be collected in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 141: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 142: The House bill provided that the war taxes on facilities furnished by public utilities and insurance should become effective June 1, 1917. The Senate changed the date of effectiveness to November 1, 1917; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 143: This amendment provides that the 3 per cent freight tax shall apply to the amount paid for transportation by any form of mechanical motor power when in competition with carriers by rail or water; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 144: The House bill provided a tax upon express of 6 per cent upon the amount paid for the transportation of property by express companies. The Senate amended this provision by proposing a tax of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fraction thereof, paid to any person, corporation, partnership, or association engaged in the business of transporting parcels or packages by express. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment changing the tax to 1 cent for each 20 cents or fraction thereof.

On amendment No. 145: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 146: The House bill provided a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount paid for the transportation of persons by rail or water. The Senate reduced this tax to 5 per cent. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment making the tax 8 per cent.

On amendment No. 147: This amendment increases the scope of the tax upon the transportation of persons to include the transportation of persons by any form of mechanical motor power when in competition with carriers by rail or water. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment by making the tax upon the transportation of persons apply to any form of mechanical motor power on a regular established line when in competition with carriers by rail or water.

On amendment No. 148: The House bill limited the tax upon transportation of persons to the amount paid for the transportation of persons within the United States. The Senate amended this provision to make the tax apply to the amount paid for transportation of persons from one point in the United States to another or to any point in Canada or Mexico where the ticket therefor is sold or issued in the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 149: The House bill provided that the tax to be paid upon the amount paid for the transportation of persons should not apply to the amount paid for commutation or season tickets for trips less than 30 miles. The Senate increased this exemption limit to 40 miles; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 150: The House bill exempted fares not in excess of 25 cents from the tax upon the transportation of persons. The Senate increased this exemption to 35 cents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 151: The House bill provided a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount paid for seats, berths, and staterooms in parlor cars, sleeping cars, or on vessels. The Senate reduced this tax to 5 per cent; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 152 and 153: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 154: This amendment provides that if a ticket (other than a mileage book) is bought but not used before the transportation tax becomes effective that it shall not be valid for passage until the tax has been paid, nor until the payment is evidenced on the ticket in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 155: The House bill levied a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount paid for electric power for domestic uses, and of the amount paid for light or heat service, and also a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount paid for telephone service by subscribers, exclusive of the amount paid for toll or long-distance calls. The Senate struck out these taxes, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 156: This amendment makes radio dispatches subject to a 5-cent tax upon each dispatch for which a charge of 15 cents or more is imposed; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 157 to 160, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 161: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment substituting the word "such" for the word "the."

On amendments Nos. 162, 163, and 164: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 165: This amendment provides that the transportation taxes shall not be construed to apply to the transportation of company material transported by one carrier which constitutes a part of a railroad system for another carrier which is also a part of the same system, nor to movements by railroad companies of the outfit, property, and persons of any amusement company, which, in the conduct of its business, owns and provides its rolling stock and equipment and which is not engaged in the transportation of commodities for sale or exchange, nor to the amount paid for special mileage books issued under transportation contracts to such amusement companies and issued for the transportation of its bona fide employees and agents. The House recedes from its disagreement with the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that the transportation taxes shall not apply to the transportation of company material transported by one carrier which constitutes a part of a railroad system for another carrier which is also part of the same system.

On amendment No. 166: The House bill provided that no war tax on facilities furnished by public utilities should be imposed upon any payment received for service rendered to officers or employees of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, in the course of their official business. The Senate amended this provision by providing that such taxes should not apply to any payment received for services rendered to the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. It further provided that the right to this exemption should be evidenced in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, should by regulation prescribe; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 167: The House bill levied the following rates upon insurance: Upon life insurance, a tax equivalent to 8 cents on each $100 or fractional part thereof of the amount for which any life is insured; upon marine, inland, and fire insurance, a tax equivalent to 1 cent on each $1 or fractional part thereof of the premium charge on each policy of insurance; upon casualty insurance, a tax equivalent to 1 cent on each $1 or fractional part thereof of the premium charge upon each policy of insurance or obligation of the nature of indemnity for loss, damage, or liability (except bonds taxable under subdivision 2 of Schedule A of Title VIII, which will be referred to under amendment No. 256). The Senate struck out all the insurance taxes. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the insurance taxes provided in the House bill and changed the date of effectiveness of these taxes from June 1 to November 1, 1917.

On amendment No. 168: This amendment relates to making the return and the payment of the taxes due under the insurance provisions. The Senate struck out this provision when it eliminated the insurance taxes; and, since the insurance taxes have been restored, the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 169: Title VI of the House bill was entitled "War tax on manufacturers." The Senate changed the title to read "War excise taxes"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 170: The House bill levied a tax upon automobiles, automobile trucks, automobile wagons, and motorcycles, and automobile, motorcycle, or bicycle tires, including inner tubes, equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making the tax upon automobiles, automobile trucks, automobile wagons, and motorcycles 3 per cent of the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price.

On amendment No. 171: The House bill provided a tax of 5 per cent upon the selling price of all musical instruments sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer for more than $10 each. This tax also applied to piano players, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, and records used in connection with any musical instrument, piano player, graphophone, phonograph, or talking machine. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment levying a tax upon piano players, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, and records used in connection with any musical instrument, piano player, graphophone, phonograph, or talking machine equivalent to 3 per cent of the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price.

The House bill provided a tax of one-half of 1 cent per linear foot upon all moving-picture films (which have not been exposed) sold by the manufacturer or importer. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this provision with an amendment restoring the House provision and making the tax one-fourth of 1 cent per linear foot.

The House bill provided a tax equivalent to 1 cent per linear foot upon all moving-picture films (containing a picture ready for projection) sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer, or importer. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and making the tax one-half of 1 cent per linear foot.

The House bill provided for the levy of a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturers', producers', or importers' selling price on any article commonly or commercially known as jewelry, whether real or imitation. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this provision with an amendment restoring the House provision and fixing the rate at 3 per cent of the price for which so sold.

The House bill provided for the levy of a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturers', builders', or importers' selling price on yachts, pleasure boats, motor boats, or other vessels not used nor intended to be used for trade. The Senate struck out the House provision and levied an excise tax upon the use of yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, and sailing boats, of over 5 net tons, and motor boats with fixed engines, not used exclusively for trade or national defense, or not built according to plans or specifications approved by the Navy Department at rates as follows: Yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, motor boats with fixed engines, and sailing boats, of over 5 net tons, length not over 50 feet, 50 cents for each foot; length over 50 feet and not over 100 feet, $1 for each foot; length over 100 feet, $2 for each foot. Motor boats of not over 5 net tons with fixed engines, $5. The House agrees to the Senate amendment to this provision with an amendment making this provision section 603 of the bill and transferring it to the end of Title VI.

On amendment No. 172: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 173: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the letter "a" to "f."

On amendment No. 176: This amendment provides that the tax levied in the sporting-goods section shall not apply to children's toys and games; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 177: The House bill provided for the levy of a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturers', producers', or importers' selling price upon all articles specified in the sporting-goods section. The Senate reduced this tax to 2 per cent. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making the tax 3 per cent.

On amendment No. 178: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the letter "b" to the letter "g."

On amendments Nos. 179, 180, and 181: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 182: The House bill provided for the levy of a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturers', importers', or producers' selling price upon perfumery, cosmetics, toilet soaps and powders, and similar articles. The Senate reduced this tax to 2 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 183: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the letter "c" to "h."

On amendment No. 184: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the word "fourteen" to "thirteen."

On amendment No. 185: The House bill provided for the levy of a tax upon medicinal preparations, compounds, or compositions equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturers', producers', or importers' selling price. The Senate reduced the rate to 2 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 186: The House bill provided a tax on chewing gum equivalent to 5 per cent of the manufacturers', producers', or importers' selling price. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and making the rate 2 per cent.

On amendment No. 187: This amendment provides for a tax upon cameras equivalent to 2 per cent of the manufacturers', producers', or importers' selling price. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making the tax 3 per cent.

On amendment No. 188: This amendment is a clerical change, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 189: This amendment is a clerical change, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 190: This amendment is a clerical change, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 191: This amendment is a clerical change, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 192: The House bill levied a floor-stock tax, equivalent to 5 per cent of the purchase price, on any automobiles, musical instruments, jewelry, sporting goods, perfumes, cosmetics, toilet soaps and powders, medicinal preparations, compounds or compositions, and chewing gum, held and intended for sale by any person, corporation, partnership, or association other than a retailer who is not also a wholesaler, and on all such articles which, between April 6, 1917, and the day this act is passed, have been sold to, and on the day this act is passed are held and intended for sale by a retailer who is not also a wholesaler. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment levying a tax on such articles which, on the day this act is passed, are held and intended for sale by any person, corporation, partnership, or association, other than a retailer who is not also a wholesaler, equivalent to one-half the tax levied upon such articles by section 600.

On amendment No. 193: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 194: The House bill provided that the admission taxes should become effective June 1, 1917. The Senate bill provided that they should become effective November 1, 1917; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 195 to 198, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 199: This amendment provides that the tax on admissions of children where an admission charge is made for such children shall in every case be 1 cent. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that the tax on admissions of children under 12 years of age where an admission charge is made for such children shall in every case be 1 cent.

On amendment No. 200: The House bill imposed a tax of 5 cents upon each admission of each person (except in the case of a bona fide employee and children under 12 years of age and municipal officers on official business) admitted free to any place for which a charge is made, and provided that this tax was to be paid by the person admitted.

The Senate struck out this provision and inserted in lieu thereof the following taxes: A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any cabaret or other similar entertainment to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount paid in excess of the established price for tickets of admission to theaters and operas and other places of amusement sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theaters, operas, or other places of amusement at not to exceed 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price charged at such ticket office; a tax equivalent to 30 per cent of the amount of any excess charge for such tickets sold for more than 50 cents in excess of the established selling price at the theater; and a tax equivalent to 50 per cent of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employees of any opera house, theater, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor.

The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment imposing a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or a fraction thereof of the price charged to persons (except bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, and children under 12 years of age) admitted free to any place at a time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons of the same class; and also imposing a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for any admission to any public performance for profit at any cabaret or other similar entertainment to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise.

On amendment No. 201: This amendment is a clerical change, striking out the House provision levying a tax of 1 cent upon the admission of children under 12 years of age. This provision has been changed to another part of this section and fully explained under amendment No. 199, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 202: This amendment exempted from the admission tax admissions to moving-picture shows and outdoor general amusement parks, main gates, shows, and rides therein, the maximum charge for admission to which is 25 cents. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment exempting from the admission tax admissions to shows, rides, and other amusements (the maximum charge for admission to which is 10 cents) within outdoor general amusement parks and admissions to such parks.

On amendment No. 203: The House bill provided that the admission tax should not apply to agriculture fairs whose entire proceeds inure exclusively for agriculture purposes. The Senate amended this provision so that the admission tickets should not apply to admissions to agriculture fairs nor to admissions to bona fide chautauquas nor lyceum courses which are contracted for or guaranteed by local companies, associations, or individuals. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that the admission tax shall not apply to agriculture fairs "none of the profits of which are distributed to stockholders or members of the association conducting the same."

On amendment No. 204: The House bill levied a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount paid as dues or membership fees (except initiation fees) to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and providing that the tax shall become effective November 1, instead of June 1, 1917, and providing that the tax shall not apply to such clubs or organizations if the dues do not exceed $12 per year. The amendment also provides that the tax shall not apply to any fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system, and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents.

On amendments Nos. 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, and 210: These amendments are clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 211: This amendment provides for making returns of certain of the admission taxes that were stricken out in conference and explained in amendment No. 200; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 212: The House bill provided that the war stamp taxes should be effective June 1, 1917. The Senate changed the date to November 1, 1917; and the House recedes with an amendment making these taxes effective December 1, 1917.

On amendments Nos. 213 to 233, inclusive: These amendments are amendments to the war stamp tax administrative provisions and clerical in nature and in the interest of clearness; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 234: This amendment was merely a clerical change; and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendments Nos. 235 to 254, inclusive: These amendments are amendments to the war stamp tax administrative provisions and clerical in nature and in the interest of clearness; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 255: The House bill provided that the tax of 5 cents on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof on bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness should become effective June 1, 1917. The Senate changed the date to November 1, 1917; and the House recedes with an amendment making their tax effective December 1, 1917.

On amendment No. 256: The House bill provided a tax on indemnity and surety bonds of 50 cents, unless a premium is charged for the execution of such bonds, in which case the tax was to be at the rate of 1 per cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged. The House provision also exempted policies of reinsurance from this tax. The Senate struck out this provision; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 257: This amendment levies a tax on parcel-post packages on which the postage amounts to 25 cents or more of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fractional part thereof charged for such transportation, and provides that the tax shall be paid by the consignor. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment changing the number of the subdivision to "14" and placing the provision at the end of the war stamp taxes title.

On amendments Nos. 258 to 261, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 262: This amendment limits the tax on sales of produce on any exchange by providing that sellers of commodities having paid this tax may transfer such contracts to a clearing-house corporation or association, and such transfer shall not be deemed a sale or agreement of sale or an agreement to sell within the provisions of this act if such transfer does not vest any beneficial interest in such clearing-house association and if it is made for the sole purpose of enabling such clearing-house association to adjust and balance the accounts of the members of said clearing-house association; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 263: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 264: This amendment exempted renewed promissory notes from the stamp tax on promissory notes of 2 cents on each $100; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 265: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 266, 267, and 268: These amendments limit the passage-ticket taxes to passage tickets sold or issued in the United States for passage by any vessel to a port or place not in the United States, Canada, or Mexico. These amendments are necessary in view of the House receding from Senate amendment No. 148 relating to passenger transportation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 269: This amendment exempts from the proxy tax of 10 cents proxies for voting at any election for officers, or meeting for the transaction of business, of any fraternal society; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 270: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 271: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 272: The House bill levied a flat additional tax on playing cards of 8 cents per pack. The Senate amended the provision by providing an additional tax of 3 cents per pack on playing cards manufactured or imported to sell at retail for not more than 15 cents per pack, and by leaving the House rate on playing cards manufactured or imported to sell at retail for more than 15 cents per pack. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment making the additional rate of tax on all playing cards 5 cents per pack.

On amendment No. 273: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 274: The House bill levied additional estate taxes ranging from one-half of 1 per cent of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000 to 15 per cent of the amount of the net estate in excess of $15,000,000. The House provision also reduced the deduction to be allowed in arriving at the net estate to $25,000 in lieu of the present deduction of $50,000, and levied a tax of 1 per cent upon the amount of the estate between $25,000 and $50,000. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring subdivision (a), the House provision, but providing that the additional tax levied in this title shall not apply to the transfer of the net estate tax of any decedent dying while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States during the continuance of the war in which the United States is now engaged, or if death results from injuries received or disease contracted in such service, within one year after the termination of such war. The amendment restoring the House provision strikes out the last House classification and provides that the highest additional estate tax rate shall be 10 per cent on net estate in excess of $10,000,000.

On amendment No. 275: The House bill levied a customs duty of 10 per cent on practically all articles that are now admitted into the United States free of duty and an additional duty of 10 per cent on all dutiable articles. Title X of the House bill also levied a war tax on coffee and tea. The Senate struck out the entire title, which contained the war customs duties and the war tax on coffee and tea; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 276, 277, 278, and 279: These amendments relate to changes in title and section numbers; and the House recedes with amendments properly numbering the same.

On amendment No. 280: This amendment provided that where additional taxes are imposed by this act upon articles or commodities upon which the tax imposed by existing law has been paid, the person, corporation, partnership, or association required by this act to pay the tax shall make return for assessment of the tax within 30 days after the enactment of the act. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment changing the word "enactment" to the word "passage."

On amendment No. 281: The House bill provided that the tax shown to be due by the return for the assessment of additional taxes upon articles or commodities upon which the tax imposed by existing law had been paid should be paid on or before November 1, 1917. The Senate amended the provision extending the time of payment to six months after the passage of this act, but provided that the time should be extended upon the filing of bond for payment in such form and amount and with such sureties as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment extending the time of payment to seven months after the passage of the act.

On amendment No. 282: This amendment relates to a change in section number; and the House recedes with an amendment properly numbering the same.

On amendment No. 283: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 284, 285, 286, and 287: These amendments relate to changes in section numbers; and the House recedes with amendments properly numbering the same.

On amendment No. 288: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 289 and 290: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 291 to 296, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 297: This amendment relates to a change in section number; and the House recedes with an amendment properly numbering the same.

On amendment No. 298: This amendment provides that in the payment of any tax under this act not payable by stamp a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more; in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 299: The purpose of this amendment is to permit the payment of income and excess-profits taxes in installments. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment permitting the payment of income and excess-profits taxes in installments, and also providing that the Secretary of the Treasury may allow credit against such taxes so paid in advance of an amount not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, calculated upon the amount so paid from the date of such payment to the date now fixed by law for such payment, and providing that no such credit shall be allowed on payments made after the expiration of four and one-half months after the close of the taxable year.

On amendment No. 300: The purpose of this amendment is to permit collectors of internal revenue to receive uncertified checks and certificates of indebtedness issued under the bond and certificate of indebtedness act of April 24, 1917, and subsequent acts, in payment of income and excess-profits taxes. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with a similar amendment making minor changes and providing that collectors of internal revenue may receive uncertified checks and certificates of indebtedness at par and accrued interest in payment of income and excess-profits taxes.

On amendment No. 301: This amendment merely changes the title number, and the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment properly numbering the title.

On amendment No. 302: The Senate bill as originally reported by the Finance Committee contained a war tax on profits of publications, and the postal rate title was extended to cover this provision. This provision was struck out in the Senate; and the Senate recedes from its amendment to the postal rate title.

On amendment No. 303: The House bill increased the postal rates upon first-class mailing matter 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof, but provided that the rate of postage on drop letters of the first class should be 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof. This provision also increased the rate upon postal cards an additional 1 cent each. The House bill provided that the foregoing rates upon first-class matter should become effective 10 days after the passage of the act. The Senate struck out this provision and incorporated a new section providing that letters written and mailed by soldiers, sailors, and marines assigned to duty in a foreign country engaged in the present war may be mailed free of postage, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, with an amendment restoring the House provision and incorporating into this section the Senate provision aforementioned and providing that the additional rates upon first-class matter shall become effective 30 days after the passage of the act.

On amendment No. 304: The House bill provided that the zone system applicable to parcel post should apply to mail matter of the second class and provided the following rates upon second-class matter (other than newspapers and periodicals entitled to be entered as second-class matter and maintained by and in the interest of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations or associations not organized for profit and none of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual):

Zone.	On and after July 1, 1917, until Nov. 1, 1917 (cents per pound).	Nov. 1, 1917, until Mar. 1, 1918 (cents per pound).	After Mar. 1, 1918 (cents per pound).

4 and 5.....	1½	2½	3
6.....	2	3	4
7.....	2½	3½	5
8.....	2½	4½	6

The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that the publisher may mail his publications from the post office of publication or any other post offices and secure the zone rate from the office from which the publication is mailed. The amendment agreed to provides a flat rate, upon reading matter and publications where the space devoted to advertisements does not exceed 5 per cent of the total space, of 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof on and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, and a flat rate upon such reading matter of 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof after July 1, 1919. This amendment makes the zones applicable to fourth-class matter applicable to the portion of second-class matter devoted to advertisements where the percentage of space devoted to advertisements exceeds 5 per cent of the total space of the publication. The rates of postage upon the portion of such publications devoted to advertisements provided by this amendment are as follows:

Zone.	On and after—			After July 1, 1921 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).
	July 1, 1918, to July 1, 1919 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).	July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).	July 1, 1920, to July 1, 1921 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).

On amendment No. 305: The House bill provided that the rate of postage on daily newspapers when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers should be the same as the rate now provided by law and provided that newspapers should have free circulation in the county of publication as under the present law. The Senate struck out this provision, and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment restoring the provision and changing the section number.

On amendment No. 306: The House bill provided that in the case of newspapers and periodicals entitled to be entered as second-class matter and maintained by and in the interest of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agriculture, labor or fraternal organizations or associations not organized for profit, and none of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, the second-class postage rates should be irrespective of the zone in which delivered (except when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, in which case the rates shall be the same as now provided by law), that the rate upon such publications should be 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof from July 1, 1917, until March 1, 1918, and thereafter 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment restoring the House provision but changing the rates as follows: "1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof on and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, and on and after July 1, 1919, 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof."

On amendment No. 307: The House bill provided that where the total weight of any one edition or issue of any publication mailed to any one zone does not exceed 1 pound, that the rate of postage should be 1 cent for each 8 ounces or fraction thereof. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision, but changing the rate to 1 cent per pound.

On amendment No. 308: The House bill provided that the rates provided by the postal rate title should relate to the entire bulk mailed to any one zone and not to individually addressed packages. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment providing that the zone rates provided by the postal title shall relate to the entire bulk mailed to any one zone and not to individually addressed packages.

On amendment No. 309: The House bill provided that where the newspaper or periodical is mailed by other than the publisher or his agent or a news agent or dealer, the postal rate shall be the same as now provided by law. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and changing the section number.

On amendment No. 310: The House bill provided that the Postmaster General should, on or before the 10th day of each month, pay into the general fund of the Treasury an amount equal to the difference between the estimated amount received during the preceding month for the transportation of first and second class matter through the mails, and the estimated amount which would have been received under the provisions of the law in force at the time of the passage of this act. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and changing the section number.

On amendment No. 311: The House bill provided: "That the salaries of postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third classes shall not be increased after July 1, 1917, during the existence of the present war. The compensation of postmasters at offices of the fourth class shall continue to be computed on the basis of the present rates of postage, unless compensation be less than that received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, in which case such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the rates of postage provided for in this act, but in no case shall the compensation so computed be greater than that received during such fiscal year." The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment providing: "That the salaries of postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third classes shall not be increased after July 1, 1917, during the existence of the present war. The compensation of postmasters at offices of the fourth class shall continue to be computed on the basis of the present rates of postage."

On amendment No. 312: This amendment provides that where postmasters at offices of the third class are granted leave without pay for military purposes, the Postmaster General may allow, in addition to the maximum amounts which may now be allowed such offices for clerk hire, an amount not to exceed 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that where postmasters at offices of the third class have been granted leave since May 1, 1917, or hereafter are granted leave without pay for military purposes, that the Postmaster General may allow, in addition to the maximum amounts which may be allowed such offices for clerk hire, an amount not to exceed 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster.

On amendment No. 313: This amendment provided that section 5 of the act of March 3, 1917, making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1918, which provides "that no letter, post card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind or containing a solicitation of or order for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in and carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law enforced in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively," shall not be construed to apply to ethyl alcohol for governmental, scientific, medicinal, mechanical, manufacturing, and industrial purposes. This amendment also provides that section 5 of the aforementioned act of March 3, 1917, shall not be held to prohibit the use of the mails by regular ordained ministers of religion or by officers of regular established churches for ordering wines for sacramental uses or by manufacturers and dealers for quoting and billing such wines for such purposes only. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making minor clerical changes.

On amendment No. 314: This amendment relates to amendments to the present income-tax law. The Senate provided that the provisions relating to withholding of the income tax at the source should be repealed and that information at the source should be substituted in lieu thereof. The House recedes from its disagreement to this portion of the amendment with an amendment providing for the repeal of the withholding provisions, except in the case of the income of nonresident aliens and interest from corporate bonds containing the tax-free covenant provision. The Senate amendment provides that in computing income tax income and excess-profits taxes shall not be allowed as a deduction, and the House accepts this amendment. The Senate amendment provides for administrative reasons that, in the case of nonresident aliens, the additional normal tax of 2 per cent shall not apply, and to equalize this exemption provides that in computing the income tax of nonresident aliens that the deduction of $3,000 in the case of single persons and $4,000 in the case of married persons or heads of families shall not be allowed, and the Senate amendment in this respect is agreed to. This amendment also allows an additional deduction of $200 for each dependent child under 18 years of age. This portion of the amendment is also agreed to. This amendment amends the corporation tax by levying an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount of corporate income remaining undistributed six months after the end of each calendar or fiscal year. It provides, however, that this additional tax shall not apply to that portion of the undistributed net income actually invested and employed in the business or retained for employment in the reasonable requirements of the business. The House recedes from the disagreement to this portion of this section with an amendment providing that this additional 10 per cent tax shall also not apply to undistributed surplus invested in obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917. This Senate amendment also provides that contracts containing tax-free covenants entered into after the passage of this act should be void. The Senate recedes from this portion of the amendment, allowing the continuance of the use of tax-free covenants in bonds.

On amendment No. 315: This amendment relates to the change of the title number to the General Provisions Title, and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 316 and 317: These amendments are clerical changes, and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 318 and 319: These amendments proposed certain changes in the customs administrative provisions, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 320: This amendment relates to a change in section number, and the House recedes with an amendment properly numbering the section.

On amendment No. 321: This amendment is a clerical change, and the Senate recedes.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
J. HAMPTON MOORE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, in reference to time for debate, I desire to state to the gentleman from North Carolina that I have requests for about an hour's time upon this side.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the conference report be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and one hour by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate upon the conference report be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and one hour by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe the gentleman from North Carolina will be able to talk for two hours himself.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the gentleman that since I last spoke to him I have requests for more than an hour's time, and I suggest that he let debate run along as best we can for a time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Very well. I made the request at the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House are happy to say that we bring back a report, perhaps for the first time in 50 years, with respect to a tax measure, which has the sanction and the signature of the entire membership of the conference committee, both Republicans and Democrats. [Applause.] I trust no gentleman will get any idea of what is in this conference report or of what transpired in the conference committee from any newspaper reports. I have not seen a statement an inch long in a newspaper since we began our deliberations that stated anything near the facts or the truth. [Laughter.] The sole thought and efforts of the conference committee were to give due deliberation to every provision of the bill and to evolve out of the differences between the House and the Senate the best, the wisest, and the most equitable measure possible for the Government and the people. There has been no discord. There have been contests, the Senate conferees contending for one item or for one provision, or for one theory or principle, and the House for another; but there has been no feeling, no heated personal contests, as the newspapers would have the country believe. Every minute of our time has been devoted to ironing out the differences between the House and the Senate. This was natural. The Senate conferees had not been presented with the arguments and reasons for the provisions of the House bill; in fact, our side had never been presented to the Senate. No one in the House could go over to the Senate and present the arguments and the reasons of the House for this or that provision of the bill, and this conference was the first opportunity for the Senate conferees to hear our reasons for the various provisions. It was also the first opportunity the House conferees had to hear fully the arguments and reasons of the Senate for its amendments. After two weeks of arduous labor and mature consideration and deliberation of the pros and cons of every proposition in the bill we present a report which, as I said a while ago, has the unanimous sanction and signatures of all the conferees.

When the House presented this revenue bill, on May 9, the demands of the Treasury Department required only $1,800,000,000 of new taxes. When the Finance Committee first reported the bill to the Senate, July 3, that amount was still the requirement and the demand. The House passed a bill raising $1,862,000,000 of revenue, $62,000,000 more than the exigency at that time demanded. The Senate Finance Committee reported the bill amended, producing about $1,650,000,000, $150,000,000 less than the requirements of the Treasury Department, but immediately thereafter new demands, new estimates of necessary expenditures in excess of about $5,000,000,000 were submitted by the Government departments. The Senate then returned the bill to the Finance Committee, at its request. After weeks of hard work, it finally reported, and the Senate passed the bill amended, which, according to its estimates, will yield $2,406,000,000. The conferees have added at least $128,000,000 to that amount, and the bill as agreed upon is estimated to yield $2,534,000,000. I first am going to state, briefly, the important amendments of the Senate upon which the conferees of the House unqualifiedly receded from its disagreements. The two most important were the amendments striking out the so-called retroactive income tax and the eliminating from the bill of the horizontal 10 per cent tariff increase. The House conferees agreed to these two Senate amendments. The Senate added 2 per cent more than the House to the corporation income tax, making the total corporate income tax rate 6 per cent—2 per cent under the present law and 4 per cent additional under this bill—and the House conferees receded.

The House also receded from its disagreement to the Gerry amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. What was the Gerry amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. The House bill carried an income-tax rate of 41½ per cent upon all incomes from $500,000 to $1,000,000 and then a rate of 45 per cent upon all incomes over $1,000,000. The Gerry amendment made a bracket between $500,000 and $750,000 and provided that incomes between $500,000 and $750,000 should bear a rate of 40 per cent, incomes between $750,000 and $1,000,000 45 per cent, and all incomes in excess of $1,000,000 50 per cent. There were other income-tax-rate amendments from which the House conferees receded. As you will recall, the Lenroot amendment put fractions in—five-tenths, seventy-five one-hundredths per cent, and so forth—and the Senate struck out the fractions and put in whole numbers. In four cases the whole numbers were larger and in one case the whole number was smaller than the House bill rates. Then in the brackets between $15,000 and $20,000 the Senate increased the rate from 5 per cent to 6 per cent. The Senate receded in this case, and the rate will now be 5 per cent. In the bracket between $20,000 and $40,000 the Senate increased the rate to 8 per cent, the House had 6 per cent. We concurred with an amendment making the rate 7 per cent. If any gentleman wishes to ask any question in regard to this—

Mr. CANNON. These rates are in addition to the present law of 1916?

Mr. KITCHIN. In addition to existing law.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated that the normal tax on corporations was 6 per cent. Was that on profits or regardless of whether they had profits or not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Six per cent on corporate net income. The existing law is 2 per cent. The House bill proposed an addition of 2 per cent. The Senate bill instead of 2 per cent added 4 per cent, and the conferees agreed to that increase, thus making the total rate 6 per cent on the net income, whether the profits are large or small.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is that assessed for three years?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. There is no time limit, for the act struck out the amendment "during the war." The Senate bill provided that the additional income tax should be effective only "during the war." The Senate conferees receded from that amendment because we must have additional revenue from income taxes provided in this bill, or some similar bill, for many years after the war. I will state here that during the Civil War this Government raised more taxes for the two years succeeding the war under the acts passed during the war by over one hundred and fifty to two hundred million dollars a year than during any year of the war. The conferees were of the opinion that it would be unwise to make the additional income tax to exist only during the war.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to ask, Is that income ascertained by taking the income for three years?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; you refer to the excess profits; I will reach that in a few minutes.

Mr. FESS. What is the maximum rate provided in this bill for incomes above a million, 50 per cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. Fifty per cent additional.

Mr. FESS. What would it amount to, the whole thing?

Mr. KITCHIN. The total income tax under the present law and under this bill on an income of $1,000,000 will be $475,180, or 47.52 per cent.

Mr. ROWE. I would like to ask, in reference to the method of taking out these taxes, do you first take out the excess-profits tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will take up the excess-profits tax in a few minutes. There is another amendment to the income tax from which the House receded. The Senate provided an exemption of $200 for each child or dependent of a head of a family or married man.

Mr. FERRIS. Is it the plan of the gentleman from North Carolina to present the salient reasons why they did not go higher on the income tax when he reaches the excess-profits tax? I know both bodies have spoken on that. The gentleman knows, and the House knows, that there is a great controversy going on in the country as to whether or not the Congress is going high enough on the excess-profits tax or the income tax.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we are going high enough on both taxes for the present.

Mr. FERRIS. I wish the gentleman would give us the salient reasons for it. I think it would be of value to all of us.

Mr. KITCHIN. In the first place, we have gone higher on the income tax than the public and perhaps Members of the House understand. We raised during the fiscal year 1917 on the income tax, in round numbers, $360,000,000. In this bill we levy an additional tax on incomes of $850,000,000. That is $1,210,000,000 that we are raising from the income tax. In other words, we will raise under the present law and this bill almost four times more tax from incomes than the amount of taxes paid in incomes for the calendar year 1916, paid, of course, into the Treasury before June, 1917. This bill also levies excess-profits taxes from which we expect to raise $1,226,000,000 revenue.

Mr. PLATT. Is it believed that if the war lasts two years the surtaxes will be increased above these figures?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think many of the surtaxes on the larger incomes will be increased, but I think that the normal tax could and should be increased, and also the surtaxes on some incomes. If we had a normal tax one-half as high as Great Britain we would raise, with our surtaxes, from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 more.

Mr. CRISP. Their normal tax is 25 per cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. Their normal tax is 25 per cent, and it begins at $633, with some little abatements, and the surtaxes begin at $12,500 and run up to $50,000, and the last surtax on $50,000 is 17½ per cent.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to know whether it would not be better to have our normal tax a little higher and the surtax a little lower?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that I think the next bill will provide an increased normal tax, and that the surtaxes may have to be increased in some of the brackets.

Mr. PLATT. There is one more question I wanted to ask. This tax is in addition to the tax in the act passed last September?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. The normal tax comes above $2,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is now 2 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. Does that increase when the income gets above $4,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. On all income of a married person or head of a family above $4,000 the normal tax is 4 per cent. The surtax upon the income between $5,000 and $7,500, 1 per cent; and $7,500 and $10,000, 2 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. There is nothing in the bill that shows that it increases at $4,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Except the language of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman called attention to the fact that we may be able in the future to increase the normal tax, and he cited the fact that England levies a 25 per cent normal tax. But there is quite a difference between the method of levying taxes in England and the method that we pursue. For example, England does not levy any real estate tax. England collects its taxes on the basis of income, so that, for example, if a man had a building in the heart of London that was worth $10,000,000 and it was idle he would not pay any taxes on it, but if a man in this country had a building worth $10,000,000 and it is idle he pays on the value of the property, so that our local taxes, added to the normal tax, would make it impossible for the American people to pay taxes on the basis of the normal tax paid in England, and it would not be justice to the American people.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman may be right.

Mr. MADDEN. Their taxes are all on incomes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have often heard the statement made in the House that all the taxes raised by Great Britain were national taxes; that there were no village or borough or city or other local division taxes. I have since learned that there are such taxes.

Mr. MADDEN. They have what they call "rates."

Mr. KITCHIN. They are taxes.

Mr. MADDEN. If I had the property I have described in England and it was not rented, there would be no income from it, and no taxes would be paid on it, so that our tax on that concern, together with our normal tax, would make it unjust to increase our normal tax in the same proportion that England makes her normal tax.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Adding together all the taxes that we pay, the previous income tax and the present income tax provided in this law and the excess-profits tax and every other form of tax imposed on the people by the Federal Government, how does it compare with the taxes imposed on the two belligerent countries, England and France?

Mr. KITCHIN. Our rates are a great deal lower, but of course, owing to our larger wealth and resources and incomes, the total amount we raise is larger than that of England or France.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman permit one other question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. How far have they been able to go out there without killing the goose that laid the golden eggs, so called, and stopping business?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, in addition to large income taxes Great Britain levied an excess-profits tax of 80 per cent on all profits in excess of the average profits they were making in 1913, 1912, and 1911, and those profits have been estimated to be around 6 or 8 per cent, on the average. So they take in Great Britain 80 per cent of all profits in excess of an average of about 6 or 8 per cent on the capital invested. In fact on new business that has begun since the war began she allows a deduction of only 6 per cent.

Mr. FERRIS. How is it in France?

Mr. KITCHIN. In France the excess-profits tax rate is 50 per cent upon all persons and companies having profits in excess of $965.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Could the gentleman give the House any information concerning the revenue that could be realized if the United States were to levy exactly the English rate on incomes and excess profits?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think I can give you some idea on that. I should say you could raise from $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 more on incomes and excess profits, retaining the surtaxes of the present law and this bill.

Mr. KEATING. So that the total to be raised on excess profits and incomes would be that?

Mr. KITCHIN. We could raise at least $3,000,000,000 more revenue than we provide in this bill if we had Great Britain's normal income tax and our surtaxes and the same excess-profits tax that Great Britain has.

Mr. KEATING. More than you provide in this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; $3,000,000,000 more than we provide in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. We are already providing about $3,800,000,000 under the present law and under this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I would like to see if I have a correct idea of the chairman's statement. According to my understanding of it, if we adopted the English rate on incomes and excess profits, how much of a revenue would the Government secure? As I understand the gentleman, he says that the English rate, applied to the American incomes and American profits, would net at least $3,000,000,000 more than the existing law and the bill that we are about to pass?

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman forgets—

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. To nobody now. I yield to myself. [Laughter.] I will say that Great Britain went to her rates gradually, and I hope we will not be forced to go as high as England's rates.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. As to the question asked by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING], as to what the same rates imposed by England would bring if imposed in this country, it would depend on other considerations. It would depend on whether our law was on all fours with the English laws.

Mr. KITCHIN. What I meant to say, and what I thought I did say, was that, if we had an 8 per cent flat basis of exemption or deduction, and that is the average in Great Britain, if you compare it with the average of the prewar period—if we had an average deduction of 8 per cent upon capital invested and then took 80 per cent of all in excess of that, we would raise about $2,000,000,000 on excess profits more than we are raising now; and if we had a normal tax of 25 per cent on all incomes, say, over $1,000, corporate and individual, with our surtaxes, I think we would raise at least $1,000,000,000 more.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. In that connection we make a deduction for depletion of mines. England allows no deduction.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me problematical, I suggest to the gentleman, what the amount of any given tax would be on excess profits next year.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course the gentleman will understand I am assuming that the profits would be as large next year as this year.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Why, the wonderful war profits that we made in munitions and other things while we were neutral will not materialize now; and we are also fixing prices on everything now. I just wanted to make that suggestion, because I did not want the country mislead, you know, by gentlemen going to the country and saying that if we taxed as they do in England we could get $3,000,000,000 more.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course it was upon the assumption that we would make as much next year, if the war continued, as we made this year.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, and withdraw all I said.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is a fact, however, that with these high taxes in Great Britain her industries have not languished at all, but seem to be doing more business now than they did two years or one year ago, or before the war.

Mr. MADDEN. There is one other difference between England and the United States. All of our States levy a corporation tax; in fact, several taxes against corporations. England does not levy any corporation tax except for national purposes, and in our bill we are adding to the taxes that are already levied against corporations by the State.

Mr. KITCHIN. Another amendment from which the House receded was the tax on cosmetics, perfumery, and proprietary medicines. The House, as you understand, imposed a tax of 5 per cent upon the gross sales of the manufacturers, producers, or importers of these articles, which would be added to the selling price to the consumers. The Senate reduced the tax upon these articles to 2 per cent, and the House agreed to that. We agreed to this reduction in rate because the bill places upon the alcohol that goes into the preparation of many of these perfumeries, proprietary medicines, and similar articles an increased tax of $1.10 per gallon.

The House also receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment striking out the 5 per cent tax on the amount paid for heat and light service and telephone service by subscribers.

These propositions which I have mentioned are the main, important ones with respect to which the House conferees yielded altogether without any concurrent amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman, if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. SLOAN. The House receded from the tariff or import taxes, did it not, entirely?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated that.

Mr. SLOAN. But he made no comment on it. Is it not a fact that nearly all the other nations are very materially increasing their import taxes? Especially is that true of Canada and Great Britain.

Mr. KITCHIN. That would be quite natural, for the reason that large importations of all kinds are being made by Great Britain and an increase of her customs would yield an increased revenue, while only small quantities of most lines of manufactured products are coming into this country. England also levies a high tax on coffee, tea, and sugar, and other articles of necessity. I do not believe that this Congress or the country are yet prepared to go to a high tax on consumption at this time, and the House conferees yielded.

Mr. SLOAN. There is, however, a very large value of imports coming into this country?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. And a very large proportion of them come in without paying any tax.

Mr. KITCHIN. These large imports are not imports that come in competition with the American manufacturer, because the war gives him all the protection from his standpoint he wants. Other countries that have been our strongest rivals and competitors—Germany, Great Britain, and France—have no manufactured products to speak of now to send over here in competition with us. The imports that are coming in are raw materials for the use of our manufacturers, who in a large measure use them in the production of articles that are exported to these countries. Our increase in exports has not only been in food products, but there has been a large increase in the exports of manufactured products.

Our importations, for instance, of raw sugar and wool have largely increased, but our exports of the finished products from them have also largely increased. We exported more than twenty times as much sugar during the last fiscal year as we did during the fiscal year 1913. We are importing it in the raw, refining it, and then exporting it. Millions of dollars' worth of wool are being imported, more than ever before, but we exported during the fiscal year 1916 twelve times more woolen products than during the like period in 1913. If you will take, as I have taken, the statistics and see what composes the immense increases of importations, you will find them to be food products and raw materials, and over half of the increase in value of imported articles has consisted of articles that were on the free list under the Dingley Act, the Payne-Aldrich Act, and the Underwood Act, such as tea, coffee, raw rubber, raw silk, and similar articles. I do not think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] would now urge an increase of duties or the placing of duties upon these articles that I have mentioned.

Mr. SLOAN. I am not favoring any increase for the purpose of protection or the reverse, but merely as a means of obtaining revenue and following the time-honored system of obtaining the greatest amount of revenue for the support of our war from duties on imports.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand.

Mr. SLOAN. All our wars heretofore, with one exception, were largely supported by the duties collected at the ports, not for protection or anything of that sort, but as the best and easiest system of obtaining revenue.

Mr. KITCHIN. I admit there is a very strong argument for putting customs duties upon some articles that come in.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that our exports are three times as large as our imports?

Mr. KITCHIN. Something over twice as large.

Mr. SABATH. And trade is in our favor to the extent of three or four billion dollars.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have already alluded to the main differences between the House and Senate with respect to the income tax and the conference agreements thereon. With the permission of the House, I will defer the explanation of the differences and agreements with respect to the excess-profits tax and the second-class mail postal rates until after I explain somewhat in order the differences and agreements with respect to other matters in the report.

TITLE III. WAR TAX ON BEVERAGES.

The House increased the war tax on distilled spirits for all purposes $1.10 per gallon. The Senate made the additional tax $1.10 per gallon on distilled spirits for manufacturing purposes and $2.10 per gallon for beverage purposes, and the conference agreement adopts the Senate rates.

The House increased the rate on beer $1.25 per barrel. The Senate made the rate $1.50 additional, and the House recedes. The total rate on beer under the act of September 8, 1916, and this law will be $3 per barrel.

The House doubled the tax now levied upon all wines except those containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol. The House increased the tax upon wines containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol an additional 2 cents per wine gallon. The Senate doubled the tax upon wines containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol and provided an additional tax upon wines containing more than 14 per cent of alcohol and not fortified with grape brandy of $1.10 per proof gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment levying an additional tax upon all still wine, including vermouth, and upon all champagne and other sparkling wines, liqueurs, cordials, artificial and other imitation wines or compounds sold as wine, equal to the tax now imposed by law.

The House provided that the tax upon grape brandy or wine spirits should be 10 cents per proof gallon in addition to the tax now levied by law. The Senate increased this additional tax to $1 per proof gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making the additional tax levied upon grape brandy or wine spirits 20 cents per proof gallon.

The House provided an additional tax upon sweet wines held for sale by the producer upon the passage of this act, equivalent to 10 cents per proof gallon upon the grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of such wine. The Senate increased this additional tax to $1 per proof gallon, and the Senate recedes.

The House levied a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which all prepared sirups or extracts (intended for use in the manufacture or production of beverages, commonly known as soft drinks, by soda fountains, bottling establishments, and other similar places) are sold by the manufacturers, producers, or importers. The Senate struck out the House tax and substituted in lieu thereof graduated rates upon such sirups or extracts, ranging from 3 cents per gallon upon such sirups or extracts when sold for not more than $1.25 per gallon to a tax of 12 cents per gallon when such sirups or extracts are sold for more than $4 per gallon. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment adopting the Senate classification and increasing the rate to 5 cents per gallon upon such sirups or extracts when sold for not more than $1.30 per gallon, and graduating the other rates so that the tax levied upon such sirups or extracts when sold for more than $4 per gallon will be 20 cents per gallon.

Mr. MADDEN. Our distilled-spirit tax was $1.10 per gallon, and the Senate raised it to $2.10?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; if the distilled spirits are used for beverage purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. And you agreed to it?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir. The additional tax is $2.10 per gallon if used for beverage purposes and a dollar less if it is withdrawn for any other purpose than beverage purposes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I notice in amendments 54 and 55 that the House provision provided that in bankruptcy proceedings of stocks of whisky that tax should be paid by the purchaser and at the time of the purchase, but I notice that you have adopted the Senate provision here that this provision should apply only during 1917.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Now, what I want to ask for information is, what is going to happen in these bankruptcy proceedings after June 1? For instance, if the stock of whisky is sold in bankruptcy, who is to pay that tax? I refer to amendments 54 and 55.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand the provision in the bill is to the effect that the person to whom the court turns the liquor over pays it when delivered.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I know that the House provision was that the purchaser should pay it, and here you say in your report:

The Senate amended this provision limiting it to distilled spirits in the custody of a court of bankruptcy in insolvency proceeding on June 1, 1917.

Suppose that since that time a distillery, firm, corporation, or individual goes into bankruptcy?

Mr. KITCHIN. Whoever purchases it thereafter will pay the full amount of the tax.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Even after the 1st of June?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. The additional tax on spirits that are not manufactured for beverage purposes is $1.10 per gallon?

Mr. KITCHIN. That remains like the House bill.

Mr. SABATH. There is no change in that?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

TITLE IV. WAR TAX ON CIGARS, TOBACCO, AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

The House provided the following rates upon cigars made of tobacco or any substitute therefor and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand: If manufactured or imported to retail at not more than 4 cents each, 50 cents per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 4 cents and not more than 6 cents each, $1 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 6 cents and not more than 10 cents each, $2 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 10 cents and not more than 15 cents each, $4 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents and not more than 20 cents each, $5 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each and not more than 25 cents each, $7 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 25 cents each, $10 per thousand. The Senate changed the cigar classification and rates as follows: If manufactured or imported to retail at 4 cents or more each and not more than 7 cents each, $1 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 7 cents each and not more than 15 cents each, $3 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents each and not more than 20 cents each, $5 per thousand; if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each, $7 per thousand; and the House recedes.

On manufactured tobacco and snuff the House provided an increase in the tax of 8 cents per pound. The Senate made the additional tax 4 cents, and we agreed upon 5 cents. In regard to cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand (the class ordinarily consumed) the House had one dollar and one quarter per thousand additional, and the Senate made the rate 75 cents a thousand additional, and we agreed on 80 cents.

TITLE V. WAR TAX ON FACILITIES FURNISHED BY PUBLIC UTILITIES AND INSURANCE.

The Senate reduced the passenger-fare transportation rate from 10 per cent to 5 per cent. It has been restored to 8 per cent. As to express companies, the House fixed the rate upon transportation by express at 6 per cent. The Senate changed the rate and made it 1 cent for each charge of 25 cents or fraction thereof. We agreed on 1 cent on each charge of 20 cents or fraction thereof. That restores the percentage practically to the House ad valorem.

On seats and berths in Pullman cars and boats the Senate reduced the House rate from 10 to 5 per cent of the amount paid for such accommodations. The House rate has been restored to 10 cents. The Senate struck out the taxes levied on life, casualty, and marine insurance and indemnity bonds. The House provisions are restored.

TITLE VI. WAR EXCISE TAXES.

The Senate struck out the moving-picture-film tax provisions, and we have put them back with half the rates of the House bill.

On automobiles the House had a 5 per cent tax on the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price, and the Senate struck that out and substituted a license tax on the automobile owner. The conferees agreed on a tax of 3 per cent on the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price.

On musical instruments the Senate struck out the whole House provision. It has been restored as to piano players, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, and records used in connection with any musical instrument, piano player, graphophone, phonograph, or talking machine, with a 3 per cent tax on the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price, instead of the 5 per cent tax provided in the House bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the automobile tax as agreed upon amount in effect to 3 per cent tax on the gross sales?

Mr. KITCHIN. On the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price and not the retail price.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The manufacturer pays 3 per cent on the gross sales.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What about the admission to various entertainments?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will get to that later.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would like to inquire whether the tax on the gross sales of automobiles and automobile trucks is paid when the Government is the purchaser?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; just like the tax on incomes of munition makers. They must pay tax on net incomes from sales to the Government.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Taking it out of one pocket and putting it in the other.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course the Government in making the price, in buying, will take into consideration the tax the article bears.

As to jewelry, the Senate struck out the provision taxing jewelry. That has been restored with a 3 per cent tax on the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price, instead of the 5 per cent tax provided by the House.

On sporting goods the Senate reduced the 5 per cent tax to 2 per cent. We agreed upon 3 per cent.

As to chewing gum the Senate struck out the House provision. We have restored the House provision with a rate of 2 per cent on the manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's selling price, instead of the House 5 per cent rate.

TITLE VII. WAR TAX ON ADMISSIONS AND DUES.

Now we come to the tax on admissions. The Senate struck out the admission tax on moving-picture shows and certain other shows where the maximum charge is 25 cents. That has been restored as the House had it, and in restoring it we get about $40,000,000 more revenue on that and other shows.

We did, however, agree to a provision in the Senate bill as to certain admissions with an amendment excepting from the tax the gate receipts of outdoor general amusement parks and the amusements and shows therein where the maximum charge does not exceed 10 cents. We also accepted the Senate amendment making certain that the admission-tax provision should apply to cabarets and other similar entertainments.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does the tax apply to county fairs and agricultural associations?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; just like it does in the House bill. They are not taxed if no part of the net income goes to private stockholders or individuals for the profit of individuals. If they put all the receipts back for the fair expansion and improvements, the tax does not apply.

Mr. ROBBINS. There are a large number of fair associations in Pennsylvania that do not declare a dividend; that put all the receipts back into a fund for premiums and exhibits the following year.

Mr. KITCHIN. The tax would not apply to such fairs.

Mr. ROBBINS. And use it for premiums for races, and so forth.

Mr. KITCHIN. The tax would not apply to such fairs unless the dividends go to the stockholders for individual benefit.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then only those who declare a dividend are taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Only those where the profit goes to the private individual.

The House levied a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount paid as dues or membership fees—except initiation fees—to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization. The Senate struck out this provision. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and providing that the tax shall become effective November 1 instead of June 1, 1917, and providing that the tax shall not apply to such clubs or organizations if the dues do not exceed $12 per year. The amendment also provides that the tax shall not apply to any fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system, and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents.

TITLE VIII. WAR STAMP TAXES.

The stamp taxes will become effective December 1, 1917.

The following were the important changes made in the taxing provisions of this title:

The House provided a tax on indemnity and surety bonds of 50 cents, unless a premium is charged for the execution of such bonds, in which case the tax is to be at the rate of 1 per cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged. The House provision also exempted policies of reinsurance from this tax. The Senate struck out this provision; and the Senate recedes.

The Senate levied a tax on parcel-post packages on which the postage amounts to 25 cents or more of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fractional part thereof charged for such transportation, and provide that the tax shall be paid by the consignor; and we agreed on this amendment.

The Senate exempted renewed promissory notes from the stamp tax on promissory notes of 2 cents on each $100; and the Senate recedes.

TITLE IX. WAR ESTATE TAX.

The Senate struck out the estate tax title. It has been restored with the following modifications: The House reduced the exemption from $50,000 to $25,000. This provision has been eliminated.

The large brackets from $11,000,000 have been stricken out. The House bill provided a tax of 7 per cent of the amount by which the estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000; 10 per cent of the amount by which the estate exceeds $11,000,000 and does not exceed $15,000,000; and 15 per cent of the amount by which the estate exceeds $15,000,000. We agreed to a tax of 7 per cent of the amount by which the estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000 and 10 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000.

Mr. ASWELL. What is the lowest amount?

Mr. KITCHIN. This is in addition to the present estate tax. Then we provided that this additional estate tax should not apply to the estate of a person who dies or is killed while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States or who dies within one year after the war from disease or wounds contracted or received in such service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What is the minimum amount to which this additional tax applies?

Mr. KITCHIN. There is an exemption of $50,000. The tax begins to apply from $50,000 up. This is in addition to the existing tax. As I said awhile ago, the House reduced the exemption from $50,000 to $25,000. The conferees struck out that reduction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman say whether any estimate has been made as to the amount that this will yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. For the first year about $6,000,000 and after the first year about $35,000,000 additional.

TITLE XI. FIRST-CLASS POSTAL RATES.

The additional rates upon first-class mail, which the House bill contained and which the Senate struck out, have been restored.

Mr. BUTLER. To 3 cents?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; on all except drop letters, where it remains at 2 cents. Postal cards will be 2 cents instead of 1 cent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the increase on the letter postage a flat rate of 1 cent? Is it 3 cents now?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; in cases where it is 2 cents now, except in the case of drop letters. It will be 3 cents hereafter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that instead of now carrying a letter from here to Alaska or the Philippines or Hawaii or Panama or Porto Rico for 2 cents the charge will be 3 cents?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is this a flat increase?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When does that increase take effect?

Mr. STAFFORD. In 30 days.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is right, 30 days after the passage of this act.

Mr. BUTLER. How much income will we derive from the increase in the postage?

Mr. KITCHIN. From first-class postage, $70,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the tax on drop letters?

Mr. KITCHIN. The rate of postage on drop letters of the first class will be 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. WALSH. With respect to the inheritance tax, was any exemption or allowance made for legacies or bequests to educational or charitable institutions?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not in the estate tax; but we did provide in the income tax that gifts to charitable, religious, educational, or scientific associations should be exempted from the income tax to an amount not in excess of 15 per cent of the taxpayers' net income.

Mr. WALSH. That would not apply to the inheritance tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. DENISON. Is any increase provided for postage on unsealed letters?

Mr. KITCHIN. Unless they are drop letters or circular letters they carry an increase of 1 cent.

Mr. DENISON. And unsealed letters would pay 2 cents?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think so; yes.

Mr. DENISON. I was informed differently, and I wanted to get the information from the chairman.

Mr. KITCHIN. We intended to have all except drop letters pay an increase of 1 cent, and I think the language will cover that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The answer which the gentleman gave to my question a moment ago seems to have misled some gentlemen about me. I mentioned only Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Panama, but the flat increase from 2 cents to 3 cents on letter postage includes all of the territory of the United States?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. That makes the rate on post cards 2 cents instead of 1 cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. If we had not provided for that, we would lose from twelve to fifteen million dollars, because people would use post or postal cards instead of letters.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman has answered this question, but I did not quite catch it. Say a letter is dropped into an office that covers a rural route. Will that letter pay 2 cents or will it pay 3 cents?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think 2 cents.

Mr. WINGO. That will be considered a drop letter?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. That is not classed as a drop letter now in an office where there is not city delivery. They charge 1 cent in the office, but on the rural route it would be 2 cents.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that will be 2 cents now.

Mr. WINGO. It is strictly a drop letter?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Where under the present regulations it would not be classed as a drop letter?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Do I understand the gentleman to say drop letters will be cheaper than postal cards?

Mr. KITCHIN. Drop letters remain the same.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Even though they are more bulky and heavy?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In reference to circular letters, are we to understand you charge 2 cents on circular letters? The gentleman has just stated to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] that he did.

Mr. MONDELL. In order to clear up the matter, will the gentleman explain what a drop letter is?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will read the provision to you:

That the rate of postage on all mail matter of the first class, except postal cards, shall 30 days after the passage of this act be, in addition to the existing rate, 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof: Provided, That the rate of postage on drop letters of the first class shall be 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof. Postal cards, and private mailing or post cards, when complying with the requirements of existing law, shall be transmitted through the mails at 1 cent each in addition to the existing rate.

A drop letter is a letter that is to be delivered from the office in which the letter was mailed.

Mr. WINGO. Then a drop letter would be 2 cents.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill, then, does not recognize the principle of drop letters as applied to postal cards?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. WINGO. Let us take a town where they have no village delivery. The drop letter is only 1 cent. Now, by using the words "drop letter" that would mean 2 cents where they now pay 1.

Mr. KITCHIN. Drop letters of the first class are to be 2 cents an ounce.

Mr. WINGO. We will take it in a town where they have not a city delivery. Now, a drop letter is 1 cent. Under the language the gentleman has just read it would be 2 cents.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it will be 2 cents.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman will permit, in order to clear up this matter, I believe a circular letter is classified as third-class postage, and I understand you have not changed that.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. It goes in the third class; the gentleman is right.

Mr. REED. It will go at 1 cent anyhow.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman is right; I think it is third-class matter.

Mr. REED. It is third class; it goes at 1 cent for 2 ounces.

MUNITION TAX.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will mention here another matter before going to the other matters of composed differences. The Senate repealed the munition-tax sections of the act of September 8, 1916, altogether. It made that repeal to date from January 1, 1917. The House insisted it should go back; that it should be unrepealed and that the Senate should recede. We finally agreed that the law should remain in force until January 1, 1918, and that the rate should be 10 per cent instead of 12½ per cent. We will get, I think, at least $25,000,000 revenue from this tax. The receipts during the last fiscal year from the munitions tax amounted to $27,600,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is on the theory that probably after January 1, 1918—

Mr. KITCHIN (interrupting). The price will be fixed by this Government, and the allies of this Government will have the same interest. We insisted that the repeal should not date back to January 1, 1917, as the Senate bill provided, for the reason that all contracts made with the foreign Government and our Government this year and for the production this year were made certainly with reference to the 12½ per cent tax in the present existing act of September 8, 1916, and the prices received and to be received took care of it.

We thought it was only right that the Government should have the benefit of this tax until January 1, 1918, so we finally agreed upon the 10 per cent rate until January 1, 1918—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted time to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, not exceeding one hour if we are going to come to a vote on this bill to-day.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will not ask so many questions I can finish in 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] be extended one hour. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp] as modified by the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Another important difference between the House and the Senate was the amendment of the Senate with respect to collection at the source.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption before he goes into that?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A moment ago the gentleman was discussing the tax on munitions. Will he please, if he can, specify the articles which are included?

Mr. KITCHIN. Powder, shells, torpedoes, cannons, guns, rifles, and so forth.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It amounts, then, to arms and ammunition?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman revert to amendment No. 202, with reference to tax on moving-picture shows. It is not clear to my mind whether or not it is proposed to tax moving pictures, as proposed by the Senate, by exempting those charging less than 25 cents admission.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just exactly like they were in the House bill. There is no tax on the people for admission to moving-picture shows where the maximum charge is 5 cents. On all others they pay 10 per cent. That is, if you go to a 10-cent moving-picture show, you should carry a penny along with you and drop it in the box for the boys in the trenches; if you go to a 15-cent moving-picture show you carry 2 pennies for the boys in the trenches; and if you go to a 25-cent picture show you carry 3 pennies. You would not hesitate to do that, would you?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Certainly not.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not believe you should.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that connection, is it possible for the proprietors of the movies to pay it without charging the patrons separately?

Mr. KITCHIN. He can if he wants to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I have received a good many communications from moving picture proprietors protesting against any tax.

Mr. KITCHIN. No doubt they thought we were going to tax their gross sales 10 per cent, and they would have to pay it.

Mr. GORDON. Has the gentleman any knowledge of anybody who wanted to be taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Nobody, except Scripps, Pinchot, and a few others that came down here while the Ways and Means Committee was considering the bill. They wanted us to take everything over $100,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask one or two plain questions, if the gentleman pleases. This bill levies an income tax on the earnings of individuals. If that individual happens to be a member of a corporation he pays a corporation tax to the extent he is interested, does he not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir. The corporation pays an income tax and the stockholder pays a surtax on his dividends if he has income large enough to get into the surtax class.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if the corporation earns excess profits above the limit fixed in this bill, he pays an excess profits tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. The corporation does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if he happens to be in the munition business, he pays extra taxes for being in the munition business?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Ten per cent in addition to all other taxes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if the corporation with which he is associated happens to have a surplus which is divided within certain periods, a tax is payable upon that surplus to the extent provided in the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, if that gentleman should happen to die, the estate he leaves his wife and children would be taxed under this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is very little that has been omitted so far as the upward career of the business man is concerned.

Mr. KITCHIN. Very little that has been overlooked. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that it can be fairly stated that everything that the gentleman has in the way of profit, from the cradle to the grave, has been covered by this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The gentleman is about correct. But I am afraid we are going to have an opportunity to increase some of these rates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman—

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that this is the price of war here and in all the countries of the world.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is one of the reasons why I propose to support the bill.

If anyone should desire to have a lawyer to proceed anywhere along the line in shaping up the business in accordance with this bill, and that lawyer should charge a fee in excess of a certain amount, the lawyer pays a tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir. If he makes an amount in excess of $6,000 he pays an excess profits tax on such excess.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if he happens to call in a doctor to administer to him in his last hours, and the doctor's fee is as large as the traffic will bear, and exceeds a certain amount, the doctor will pay the tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. He will pay an excess profits tax, too, on the amount in excess of $6,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if the undertaker happens to have made enough out of carrying the unfortunate body to the grave, and carries enough other bodies, and has charged enough in fees to have excess profits over $6,000 a year, he also will pay a tax?

And I wish to ask this, in fairness, as it puts the other side of the case. The retroactive tax which was in the House bill is knocked out of this bill. There is no retroactive tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no retroactive tax, no ex post facto tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. The so-called retroactive tax is not in this bill now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The tax on heat and light has been knocked out of this bill, so that the occupants of the small homes have been relieved to that extent?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I have already explained that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The tax on tea and coffee has also been taken out of the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and the tax on sugar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that those things stand to the credit of the conference report, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to suggest to all gentlemen, although we have been getting along here very quietly, that the right way to interrupt a man who is on the floor is to address the Speaker first and ask permission, and the very worst feature of behavior in the House is that some gentleman sitting in his seat will interject himself into the debate. It does not give the man on the floor a fair chance. It is done without thought; but these rules ought to be observed, because they tend to good order in this House.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have been interested in what the gentleman has said about the taxation of everything under the sun. I want to call attention to a matter of amendment or change that was made by the conferees that appears on page 7 of the bill as printed. Originally this amendment, which was inserted by the conferees, was offered as an amendment in the House and rejected here; but it was put in by the conferees and is in order, I guess, in view of a Senate amendment along the same line.

Now, this excepts from the provisions of this act income that is derived by a person who is a member of a holding corporation when the income tax has been paid by the subsidiary corporation. Now, I want to ask this: Does the chairman know any reason why a man who owns stock in a holding corporation and whose money is invested in this holding corporation and not invested in the subsidiary corporations can not make investments in the holding corporation and be entirely free from the income tax on his investments?

Mr. KITCHIN. Any corporation that has stock in another corporation subject to the tax is relieved from the payment of the income tax or excess profits tax imposed by this bill with respect to the dividends received from such other corporation, but is not relieved from the income tax as imposed by existing law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is, if he owns stock in a holding corporation, for instance?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Take, for example, the United States Steel Corporation, which has about 50 subsidiary companies. It owns the stock of those subsidiary companies. It owns the stock, say, in corporation A. Corporation A pays a tax upon all its earnings, upon its whole net income, and on its excess profits, and after paying these it turns the remaining income over to the parent company, the United States Steel Corporation. Now, that provision does not tax those dividends in the hands of the United States Steel Corporation, for the reason that the tax on all the earnings of the subsidiary company from which these dividends came have been paid by the subsidiary company. Those who strongly advocated this provision and believed that it was right said it would be double taxation. Now, the gentleman from Illinois need not look me in the face as if I agreed to all of that. [Laughter.] If I had had my way, that provision would not have been in it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I thought I knew how you stood on that proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. But I could not have my way all the time, and no other conferee could have his way all the time. There were nine others on that conference committee, each of whom also had a way.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The owner of stock in the United States Steel Co., of a holding company, is let out of the tax if that is all he owns?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, that dividend has already paid the tax before it gets into its hands.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. The subsidiary company has paid it and the owner of stock in the subsidiary company has paid it.

Mr. KITCHIN. That was one of the important differences between the Senate conferees and the House conferees. The Senate had a provision in the bill releasing from all income taxes, both under existing law and under this bill, dividends received by a corporation from a corporation that was subject to the tax upon the ground that it was a double taxation. Personally I was opposed to that. We had somewhat of a contest over it. We finally agreed that the provision which the gentleman has just read should only apply to the additional income taxes imposed by this bill, but that the corporation tax of 2 per cent under existing law should be paid by both the subsidiary company and the parent company. That is all we could get out of the Senate conferees. The House conferees considered that very carefully, and while we believed it ought to be just as the House bill had it, we recognized that a material change had been made in the bill since it left the House that would perhaps justify us in yielding to the extent explained. I recall that the gentleman and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENOIR], and myself and several other Members voted down in the House the proposition when offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING]. Then the normal tax on corporations, subsidiary and other corporations, would have been 4 per cent under the present law and the House bill. Since then the Senate by amendment, to which the House conferees agreed, increased the tax on corporations from 4 to 6 per cent. This increase of 2 per cent on all earnings of the subsidiary companies and the retention by the conferees of the 2 per cent under existing law which the parent or holding corporation must pay somewhat evens up matters.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman at some time three or four questions about the excess profits tax provision, and I would like to know whether the gentleman would now like me to postpone those questions?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Please postpone them for a minute. Now, there was another important difference between the House and the Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The character of the excess profits tax is somewhat difficult to ascertain from a casual reading of this very complicated bill, and therefore I ask this question, which has been submitted in perfect good faith by a very excellent gentleman: A corporation during the prewar period made an average profit of $3,000 a year. After the war began it bought out a competitor, borrowed $75,000 in money, and made a considerable investment in new buildings, and is capitalized for $125,000. This last year its profits were $15,000. Now how do you, under those circumstances, adjust the difference between the prewar period and the war period?

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman mean that the corporation was merged or reorganized during the war?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They made a new corporation entirely.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is a provision in the bill to take care of that. Where a corporation is reorganized with practically the same owners it is considered, so far as the percentage of deduction is concerned, a continuance of the business.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But there are new owners in it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know, but there are also the old owners in it. If the old owners succeed to the new business, then they take the percentage that they had before the war, but if it is discontinued altogether, if the old owners gave up their business and got out, and an entirely new corporation was organized since the prewar period, then it would take an 8 per cent deduction, as provided in the bill for new companies or business.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The prewar income is no longer the basis of taxation.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is no longer the basis of taxation, but it is still the basis of the deduction in a much more limited extent than was in the Senate amendments. There still exists a differential of 7 and 9 per cent. I am going to get to that and explain it as best I can.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is exceedingly important in the case of this particular corporation, because for this $75,000 of new capital invested they gave notes payable monthly, and it requires a profit in order to meet those notes and amortize the debt.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that if there is a change of corporation, company, business, or ownership altogether, then it is a new company that was not in existence during the prewar period, and it would take the 8 per cent deduction for the new business. That is, it would have an 8 per cent deduction upon the capital invested by the new company plus a further deduction of $3,000. Then the rate of taxation would apply on the income in excess of the deduction.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Eight per cent deduction on the capitalization.

Mr. KITCHIN. On the invested capital, surplus, and undivided profits, plus $3,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Plus $3,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Information and withholding at the source.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me explain another difference, which I started to explain awhile ago. The Senate substituted what is known as information at the source instead of collection at the source, in its amendment to the income tax. For several years, since we first enacted the income tax of 1913, there has been a contest between the owners of bonds or obligations containing what is called a tax-free covenant and the makers of those bonds. In about $10,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000 of bonds issued by railroad companies, telephone companies, and large industrial corporations there is a covenant something like this: If the Government should ever require retention at the source of income tax on the interest payments on these bonds, then the maker agrees to pay the full amount of the interest to the bondholder without deduction of the income tax paid. Of course, naturally those who executed these bonds would like to abolish collection at the source, which was provided in the acts of 1913 and is now provided in the act of 1916. Both acts required the corporation to withhold the income tax upon the interest on these bonds. If we were to accept the Senate amendment, then these corporations would get rid of paying the tax, which they agreed in the bonds to pay, and it would throw several million dollars of taxes upon the individual holders of these bonds. It was finally agreed that we should retain collection at the source with respect to these tax-free covenant bonds. So the law, as far as that is concerned, is not changed by this bill. They will withhold at the source one normal 2 per cent tax, but if we ever levy a greater flat normal tax, we will require the corporation to withhold and pay that tax. We were unable to require the corporation to withhold both normal taxes, because the corporation would not know how much to withhold in view of the different exemptions under the act of September 8, 1916, and this bill.

In all other cases we substitute information at the source instead of payment at the source.

TITLE II. WAR EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

I will now discuss the differences and final settlement between the Senate and the House conferees with respect to the excess profits tax.

The House levied an excess-profits tax in addition to the excess-profits tax levied by the act of March 3, 1917, of 8 per cent upon the net income of corporations and partnerships in excess of 8 per cent of the capital actually invested and an additional exemption of $5,000.

This additional 8 per cent tax would have made the total excess-profits tax under the act of March 3, 1917, and this act 16 per cent. This tax was determined when the needs of the Treasury were only estimated to be $1,800,000,000. Had we have known at the time the House passed the bill of the new demands of several billions of dollars which arose later, of course, we would have provided higher and graduated excess profits tax rates, graduated according to the per cent of profits made on the invested capital.

The House bill, it will be observed, had the same exemption or reduction for all and the same tax rate for all. There was neither discrimination against nor favoritism to any, conditioned upon whether or not the corporation or partnership was fortunate or unfortunate during some arbitrarily fixed period before the war. It considered only the prosperity of the taxable partnership or corporation—its ability to pay its share of the war burden in the taxable year.

It included only corporations and partnerships and excluded individuals because (1) of the extreme difficulty in the administration of the law as regards individuals, and (2) of the exemption from the income tax of partnerships and the exemption of corporations from the surtax, and (3) of the discrimination an excess-profits tax on individuals would make in favor of a corporation as against an individual in same business, same capital, and same profits, especially in view of the large surtax on the income of the individual, and the further view that officers of a corporation, substantially the owners of it, can deduct from its income subject to excess-profits tax salaries for their services, while the individual can have no deduction for salary on account of his services.

The Senate struck out the entire excess-profits tax title of the House bill, repealing also the existing law as to such tax, and wrote a substitute therefor. Its substitute made as the basis for deduction or exemption the amount of profits, or the percentage of profits, made during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913, called the prewar period. It graduated the tax not upon the per cent of profits made on the invested capital but upon the per cent of profits made in excess of the deduction or exemption. It applied the tax to individuals as well as to corporations and partnerships. Individuals were given an exemption of $5,000 in addition to the per cent of prewar-profits deduction. Corporations and partnerships whose income was $5,000 or over were given no specific exemption, but the tax did not apply to those making less than $5,000.

The bill as reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate levied what it called a tax on "war profits"—so named in the amended bill. It conclusively assumed that every dollar of or income made by a corporation, partnership, or individual during the taxable year in excess of the profits or income made during the prewar period—1911, 1912, and 1913—was made out of or because of the war. It proposed, therefore, to tax only the profits made during the taxable year which were in excess of the profits made during such prewar period. The deduction or exemption was the amount of profits, or per cent of profits, on capital employed made during the prewar period, but it was provided that it should not be less than 6 per cent in any case. The more fortunate and prosperous one was during the prewar period the larger was his deduction or exemption and the less tax he would have to pay. The less fortunate and less prosperous one was during the prewar period the smaller was his exemption or deduction and the more taxes he would have to pay. For instance, if a corporation was making $25,000,000 profits, or 50 per cent on its invested capital during the prewar period—and there were many such cases—before the tax attached to its income or profits, it would be given a deduction of 50 per cent of the capital invested during the taxable year. In numerous cases corporations, though extremely prosperous, would pay nothing because they were equally as prosperous during the prewar period. On the other hand, if another corporation with same capital, in same kind of business, making same profits during the taxable year, was making only 6 per cent on its capital during the prewar period, it would have only a deduction of 6 per cent on its capital during the taxable year, and would therefore pay an amount of taxes many times greater than its competitor.

After the bill as reported had been under discussion for some time in the Senate the Finance Committee discovered that many of the largest and most successful corporations, making during the prewar period from 10 per cent to over 80 per cent profit, would under the committee's amendments have an exemption or reduction so large that they would escape payment of about $450,000,000 of taxes yearly; some making as high as from 25 per cent to over 75 per cent would pay no taxes at all. It therefore abandoned the theory of taxing so-called "war profits" alone and proposed an amendment or substitute for the former amendment, which the Senate adopted, making the tax one in the nature of an "excess-profits" tax instead of a "war-profits" tax—a tax on the profits in excess of a certain per cent of profits on invested capital—and both the Finance Committee and the Senate adopted substantially the House definition of capital.

The committee and the Senate, however, still retained in the bill as passed by the Senate a differential as to the deduction or exemption, based upon the per cent of profits made during the prewar period, but provided that the exemption or deduction should in no case be less than 6 per cent nor more than 10 per cent of the capital invested, accordingly as the corporation, partnership, or individual was making 6 per cent or less or as much as 10 per cent or more during the prewar period. For instance, if a corporation was making during the prewar period 6 per cent or less, it would have, under the bill as it passed the Senate, in computing the tax, 6 per cent of its capital invested during the taxable year as a deduction from its profits in the taxable year, and the tax would apply only to the profits in excess of the 6 per cent deduction. If it made during the prewar period 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent on its invested capital, it would have, respectively, 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent of the invested capital during the taxable year as a deduction from the profits of the taxable year, and the tax would attach only to the profits in excess of the respective deductions. If it made over 10 per cent during the prewar period, it could only have 10 per cent deduction for the taxable year, as it was provided in the later amendment or substitute that the deduction should in no case exceed 10 per cent.

The bill as passed by the Senate also retained the provision graduating the rates of the tax upon the per cent of profit made during the taxable year over the deduction or exemption and not upon the per cent of profits made on the capital invested during the taxable year. It reads:

Twelve per cent of the amount of such war profits not in excess of 15 per cent of the deduction—

And so forth.

Sixteen per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 15 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 25 per cent thereof.

Twenty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 25 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 50 per cent thereof.

Twenty-five per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 50 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 75 per cent thereof.

Thirty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 75 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 100 per cent thereof.

Thirty-five per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 100 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 150 per cent thereof.

Forty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 150 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 200 per cent thereof.

Forty-five per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 200 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 250 per cent thereof.

Fifty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 250 per cent of such deduction and do not exceed 300 per cent thereof.

Sixty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 300 per cent of such deduction.

These were the main differences between the House and the Senate, and this was the shape of the bill with respect to the excess-profits tax when the conferees met.

These differences were composed in conference by rewriting the excess-profits tax title. As agreed on, it provides for the levying of a graduated tax, ranging from 20 to 60 per cent, based upon the per cent of profit or income made during the taxable year on the invested capital, as follows:

Twenty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the deduction (determined as hereinafter provided) and not in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year;

Twenty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 per cent and not in excess of 20 per cent of such capital;

Thirty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent and not in excess of 25 per cent of such capital;

Forty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 25 per cent and not in excess of 33 per cent of such capital; and

Sixty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 33 per cent of such capital.

The tax applies to individuals, partnerships, and corporations. Citizens or residents of the United States and domestic partnerships have a flat, specific deduction of $6,000 and domestic corporations have a flat, specific deduction of $3,000. Besides these deductions each trade or business has a deduction equivalent to the average percentage of its income to its invested capital during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913, but this deduction can not be less than 7 per cent nor more than 9 per cent of its invested capital for the taxable year.

In case the income of a trade or business during 1911, 1912, and 1913 was not representative of like concerns engaged in similar business the Secretary of the Treasury may grant a deduction equivalent to the deduction granted such concerns.

In case of a trade or business, including professions and occupations, employing no capital, or only a nominal capital, an additional income tax of 8 per cent is levied upon the incomes of such trades or businesses in excess of $6,000 in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States, and $3,000 in the case of a domestic corporation.

If a corporation or partnership was not in existence, or an individual was not engaged in the trade or business, during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, the deduction will be an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year, plus $3,000 in the case of a domestic corporation and $6,000 in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States or a domestic partnership.

It will be noted that while a differential as to the deduction of 7 per cent to 9 per cent, instead of 6 per cent and 10 per cent as in the Senate provision, is made, the difference between the two deductions is very small, in view of the method of graduating the rates of the tax agreed on by the conferees. If the conferees had adopted the Senate's method of graduating the tax, even with the slight differential of 7 per cent and 9 per cent, the difference in the amount of tax between a 7 per cent and a 9 per cent deduction would have been quite large and the difference in the amount of tax between a 6 per cent and a 10 per cent deduction, as was provided in the Senate amendment, would have been extremely large. For instance, a corporation with a capital of $100,000, making a profit during the taxable year of $25,000, or 25 per cent, with a 6 per cent deduction, would have paid $7,029 of taxes, while a corporation in same business, same capital, and making the same profits during the taxable year, with a 10 per cent deduction, would have paid only $3,965, or over $3,000 less. Under the provision agreed on the difference between the amount of tax to be paid by a corporation with the same capital and same profits, with a 7 per cent deduction, and a corporation with a 9 per cent deduction is only $400.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have a great many oil wells and coal mines in my district, and the owners of the property tell me that when they are taking out oil or coal they are exhausting their principal, and they have wondered if the excess profits applied to them when they are taking out their product and exhausting their principal.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What did the conferees conclude as to that?

Mr. KITCHIN. We did not take care of that proposition. Let me say that I have had owners of oil wells and of coal and zinc mines and lumbermen tell me that each day in carrying on their business they are exhausting their capital and ought to have a reduction in some way on their excess-profits tax on this account. They are mistaken. They are not exhausting their capital each day, but instead they are getting their capital back each day. For instance, suppose I put $100,000 into standing timber costing, say, $5 a thousand feet, and erect a sawmill and cut it into lumber. Every time I cut a thousand feet I charge that $5 up as cost of raw material, along with the cost of labor and other expenses. When I sell that thousand feet of lumber I add the cost of the standing timber, labor cost, and other expenses to the price for which sold. Five dollars of my principal is returned to me with a profit on it upon the sale of each thousand feet. Instead of exhausting their capital daily, a part of their capital is each day being returned to them to be again invested.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But is it a profit?

Mr. KITCHIN. They get their capital back and the profit, too.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it a profit when they are taking their capital out of the mines?

Mr. KITCHIN. For instance, a man puts $300,000 into a coal mine, and the coal in the mine, say, stands him 5 cents a ton. He begins to mine and sell the coal. In the price of every ton he sells is included the cost of the coal in the mine, the cost of labor, overhead charges, and all other expense, and his profit. On every ton sold he gets back that part of his capital which he invested in or paid for that ton of coal at the mine.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But suppose he has 160 acres of coal land, and he has mined all of that 160 acres, and it is completely exhausted?

Mr. KITCHIN. He has got his entire capital back. His mine is exhausted, but the capital he put into it has been returned to him from time to time as he mined and sold the coal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But is that charged to him as profits?

Mr. KITCHIN. The income-tax law and this bill permit him to deduct the cost of that coal, in getting at his profits or income that year for the purpose of the tax. He deducts that, deducts the overhead charges, labor, and all other expense in determining the profits or income in his business.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Here is a man who has an oil well that cost him $20,000. Every time he takes 20 barrels of oil out of that well he exhausts the value of his investment, does he not?

Mr. KITCHIN. He exhausts that much of the oil in the well and the well is worth that much less, but instead of exhausting his capital put into it, he has had it returned to him at every sale of a barrel of oil to the extent of the cost to him of the oil in the well. Suppose the oil in which his capital was invested cost him at the rate of 25 cents a barrel; every barrel he takes out, when he sells it, he gets back 25 cents of his capital that he has put in. When he has exhausted the well he has had returned to him the $20,000 in the price he received for the oil. Suppose I buy standing timber for $100,000 and the next day I sell it for $150,000. I have sold all of it in one sale and got my capital back the next day and $50,000 profit. Suppose I cut it up into lumber and sell it in that way, taking a year in which to cut it; each day I cut and sell I get part of my capital back. When I have sold it all I have all my capital back and the profits on my investment. As a matter of justice one should not have a deduction on the whole amount of original capital when in the nature of the business his capital is from time to time returned to him as in the case of timber, oil, and mining business, and such returned capital should not be used as a basis of deduction.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Senate Finance Committee took as its basis for computing the excess-profits tax certain prewar profits. That has been abandoned, except as there is a margin between 7 and 9?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman stated that to ascertain the net income for the purposes of taxation there will be deducted overhead charges, labor, and so forth.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is in the present income tax.

Mr. REAVIS. And the amount arrived at for the purposes of taxes on incomes would be the basis of the excess-profits tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; you get that first.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me suggest this condition, and it doubtless prevails in the gentleman's district as it does in mine: Take, for instance, the farmer who has a large family following the example of the gentleman, and who employs his boys upon the farm to aid him in his work. Is he entitled to a deduction for that labor, even though he does not pay for it?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. REAVIS. Then he would be paying excess-profits taxes on the labor rather than on the real profits, would he not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, to a certain extent, because in most States if the child is under 21 his labor belongs to the parent.

Mr. REAVIS. He is entitled to the labor?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. That being true, he would pay a tax on the returns with no deductions for labor.

Mr. KITCHIN. And that is one reason why I personally and the House conferees were not in favor of including individuals in the excess-profits tax. The owner of practically all the stock of the corporation could charge up his own salary as officer of the corporation, and for the labor of his wife and children if they performed services for it, and deduct the amounts so paid or charged up as part of the operating expenses from the amount of taxable income or profits, while the individual in same kind of business with same capital and making same profits could not have any such deduction.

Mr. REAVIS. All of the labor within the corporation they are entitled to deduct?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but one thing we did manage to get, to offset that somewhat. We secured in the agreement for the individual and the copartnership an exemption or deduction of $6,000 flat, while the corporation gets only $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I think there is a provision in the conference report that gives a man credit, in making up his returns, for everything that he contributes to educational, religious, or charitable institutions.

Mr. KITCHIN. To the extent of 15 per cent of his net income.

Mr. CANNON. He would get a part of it. The newspapers say, and I have no doubt it is true, that a certain wealthy gentleman contributed $5,000,000 to the Red Cross. So he would get a reduction for that?

Mr. KITCHIN. On his income tax, if it did not exceed 15 per cent of his total net income.

Mr. CANNON. He would get all of it?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; 15 per cent. Suppose one's net income is $10,000,000. He can give away 15 per cent or $1,500,000 of that to charitable, religious, or educational organizations, and that amount would be exempt from income tax.

Mr. CANNON. And he still has a free hand as to $8,500,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. That $1,500,000 would be untaxed so far as the income tax is concerned, and all the balance of the net income would be taxed.

Mr. CANNON. There is no difference between the individual and the corporation, is there, in making up the excess-profits tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Individuals, copartnerships, and corporations are subject to the tax, but we give the individual and the copartnership a $6,000 exemption so far as the excess-profits tax is concerned, while the corporation gets only $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. I want to see if I am right about a kindred proposition. I have a constituent who has an income of, say, $25,000, substantially all from dividends of corporations that are engaged in business. He is a gentleman of leisure. The corporation pays the excess-profits tax and also the individual?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think in the case the gentleman cites that the individual would pay any excess profits tax, as he is not engaged in trade or business and has no profession or occupation. He, of course, would pay an income tax. The difference between the excess profits tax and the income tax is this: The income tax is a tax upon the total net income received from all sources, with a few certain exceptions. The excess-profits tax as now written in the bill is a tax on trade or business, including professions and occupations; that is, on the income or profits of trade or business, including professions and occupations.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman will permit—

Mr. KITCHIN. But if an individual is in business—say the mercantile business—and has investments in railroad stocks and bonds and receives $10,000 from them, disconnected altogether from his business, that would not be included in determining the income subject to excess-profit tax.

Mr. CANNON. But the corporation would pay the tax before he got it; then he would pay the tax after he got it. It is double taxation.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the corporation pays the normal or corporation tax. The individual will not pay the normal tax on dividends received from a corporation that is taxed. If you receive $10,000 or $50,000 or any amount from dividends of corporations subject to the tax, you are exempt from paying on those dividends the normal tax, which under this bill is 4 per cent. But you must pay the surtax on income from the corporate dividends as well as from other sources when the income exceeds $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. I understand; under the law of 1916.

Mr. KITCHIN. Under this bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. Take, for instance, the case of a gentleman having no particular business or occupation but who owns several thousand acres of farm land, which he rents. Does he pay any excess-profits tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. There is some doubt as to this, but I am inclined to believe that he would pay an excess-profits tax. He would probably be construed as being in the business of renting land.

Mr. REAVIS. Or a man loaning money?

Mr. KITCHIN. If loaning money was his business or part of his business, he would pay. An occasional loan of money by one not in the business of loaning money would not be subject to the excess-profits tax.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have in mind a corporation started several years ago with $15,000 capital. No dividends have been declared and the profits have been left in the business, until today there is an investment of $175,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. There would be a deduction upon the whole $175,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield.

Mr. TOWNER. I hope the gentleman understands, as I think the House does, how very important this interpretation of the bill is to us and will be to others. I was wondering if it would be impractical for the gentleman to put into his revision of remarks a statement showing what would be the amount of taxes of individuals doing business, say, on an easily determined capitalization of $100,000, with profits of, say, $10,000, $25,000, and $50,000 a year?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman means income tax and excess-profits tax, both?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have them here, but it will take very long to read them. I will say to the gentleman—

Mr. TOWNER. I do not expect the gentleman to do it now. Just take a corporation doing a business of $100,000 a year and give us a basis of what would be paid on profits of $10,000, $25,000, $50,000, $75,000, or $100,000 on the capitalization. It occurs to me it would be very valuable, not only to Members but to the country at large.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will append tables showing the application of the tax and the amount to be paid in certain specified cases of capital invested and profits made.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield, that will be in the shape of a table?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And made up by experts?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; made up by experts.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will do so, because I get letters constantly about that, and I would like to send them the table.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Referring to the question I just put and the gentleman's answer, the friend I referred to with $175,000 capital is now earning 10 per cent on $175,000, and under this plan the exemption is $5,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Three thousand dollars flat plus the same percentage of profits on invested capital as it was making during the prewar period, not to exceed 9 per cent. The Senate had no flat specific exemption for corporations. The House had $5,000, and we agreed on $3,000. The Senate amendments, however, provided that the excess-profits tax should not apply to corporations whose net income was less than $5,000. In other words, by such a provision a corporation that made $4,999 would not pay a cent of the excess-profits tax, but the corporation that made $5,000 or over would pay an excess-profits tax on the whole $5,000. As I said, we finally agreed on a flat specific exemption of $3,000 to all corporations. In the case the gentleman speaks of, if the corporation was making upon its invested capital, including surplus and undivided profits, during the prewar period of 1911, 1912, and 1913, 7 per cent or less, it would have 7 per cent of its invested capital, including surplus and undivided profits, during the taxable year as a deduction plus the $3,000 flat deduction. If it was making 8 or 9 per cent or over during the prewar period, it would have for the taxable year as a deduction, respectively, 8 or 9 per cent plus the $3,000. The deduction under the report can not be less than 7 per cent nor more than 9 per cent.

Mr. McFADDEN. It seems to me under that argument the gentleman is going to avoid paying any tax.

Mr. KITCHIN. If, as I understand the gentleman to say, the corporation was now making 10 per cent, that is, $17,500, and that it made 10 per cent before the war on the invested capital—

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. It would have a deduction of 9 per cent, because under the provision agreed on by the conference it can not go over 9 per cent plus the $3,000 flat deduction.

Mr. McFADDEN. He would be paying on 1 per cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. It would pay no excess-profits tax, as the deductions would be $18,750, $1,250 more than the net income. The 9 per cent deduction on $175,000 is $15,750. Add the $3,000 and it will be $18,750 as a total deduction.

Mr. CANNON. If he was making on the average for the three prewar years more than this year, he would not pay anything?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the bill as first reported by the Senate committee it would not. But the bill as finally passed by the Senate provided that the deduction should in no case exceed 10 per cent of the capital invested. Under the bill as agreed on by the conference the deduction can in no case exceed 9 per cent of the invested capital plus the flat specific deduction or exemption.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman define more clearly what he means by invested capital?

Mr. KITCHIN. We have agreed on a definition as to invested capital substantially as the House had it, with some modification as to good will and other intangible assets. We also provide that property turned over for shares and stock in a corporation or partnership prior to January 1, 1914, to be valued at its cash value not as of the time it was turned over, but as of January 1, 1914. All property turned over since January 1, 1914, is valued at its cash value at the time so turned over. We make another provision that I am not specially impressed with. We have modified the meaning of "capital invested" by permitting stock issued in good faith for good will, franchise, trade-marks, and trade brands prior to March 3, 1917—the date of the passage of the excess-profits act of March 3, 1917, which gave corporations notice that they could not do so any more—up to 20 per cent of the total amount of the capital stock to be counted as part of the invested capital.

Let me read the language of the bill as agreed on defining the meaning of invested capital:

Sec. 207. That as used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means the average invested capital for the year, as defined and limited in this title, averaged monthly.

As used in this title "invested capital" does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title, nor money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January 1, 1914, the actual cash value of such property as of January 1, 1914, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used in the business, exclusive of the undivided profits earned during the taxable year: Provided, That (a) the actual cash value of patents and copyrights paid in for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment, shall be included as invested capital, but not to exceed the par value of such stock or shares at the time of such payment, and (b) the good will, trade-marks, trade brands, the franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, shall be included as invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, the value of such good will, trade-mark, trade brand, franchise, or intangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment; but good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, bona fide purchased, prior to March 3, 1917, for and with interests or shares in a partnership or for and with shares in the capital stock of a corporation (issued prior to March 3, 1917), in an amount not to exceed on March 3, 1917, 20 per cent of the total interests or shares in the partnership or of the total shares of the capital stock of the corporation, shall be included in invested capital at a value not to exceed the actual cash value at the time of such purchase, and in case of issue of stock therefor not to exceed the par value of such stock.

(b) In the case of an individual, (1) actual cash paid into the trade or business, and (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid into the trade or business, other than cash, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January 1, 1914, the actual cash value of such property as of January 1, 1914), and (3) the actual cash value of patents, copyrights, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, or other intangible property, paid into the trade or business at the time of such payment, if payment was made therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property bona fide paid therefor at the time of such payment.

In the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or of a nonresident alien individual, the term "invested capital" means that proportion of the entire invested capital, as defined and limited in this title, which the net income from sources within the United States bears to the entire net income.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. In defining what is the "invested capital," would the company be permitted to value its capitalization on the present inflated prices?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. We provide against that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman propose an excess-profits tax on the business corporation without any capital, the earnings of which are alone dependent on the business skill of the members?

Mr. KITCHIN. I purpose to take up that question and discuss section 209 later on, but since the gentleman has asked the question I will now take it up. In the House bill, the excess-profits tax applied only to corporations and partnerships, and not to individuals. The Senate included individuals in its amendments. It made the individual merchant, farmer, banker, lumberman, miner, the manufacturer, and every other class of individuals in trade or business subject to the excess-profits tax. But it exempted from the tax the incomes of lawyers and doctors and other professional men derived from their profession; also salaries of offices and employments, including the salaries of business occupations, as well as those of governmental officers. The House conferees opposed the inclusion of individuals in the excess-profits tax provision, for the reasons I have before given. The Senate conferees insisted upon including them, but agreed to grant them a specific deduction of $6,000 plus the deduction of the per centum of profits made on invested capital, if any, the same as is given to corporations and partnerships.

After much consideration the conferees unanimously agreed that there should be no exemption from the tax of lawyers, doctors, civil engineers, or other professional men, or the high-salaried business man. So the conferees, after mature deliberation and after a special conference committee meeting called for the purpose of considering the matter, unanimously agreed on section 209, which is as follows:

That in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deduction: In the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction.

A prior section defines trade or business to include professions and occupations. There is not a more proper or just provision in the entire bill than this one. If the individual farmer, merchant, banker, miner, lumberman, manufacturer, and every other class of individuals in trade or business are made to pay the tax, why should not the lawyer, the doctor, and other professional men, who made a profit or income in his profession of over $6,000 be also made to pay? Why should not the high-salaried business man be made to pay?

What good reason can be given why the farmer and merchant and manufacturer should be made subject to the tax and the lawyer, doctor, and other professional men be exempt from the tax?

The only fair and reasonable objection that can be made to the provision is that the tax is not high enough to equalize the tax which the farmer, merchant, and manufacturer has to pay. They must pay from 20 to 60 per cent of their income or profits in excess of their deductions, while the professional man and the high-salaried business man will pay only 8 per cent on their income in excess of their deduction. Of course the farmer, merchant, or manufacturer has a larger deduction on account of having substantial capital invested, but this deduction will not reduce his tax to as low as that of the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man.

It is suggested that the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man should not be taxed because his income is derived from his brain and time and personal qualification. Does not the farmer, merchant, or manufacturer carry to his business his personal qualification? Does he not devote to his business his brain and time, and in addition puts capital in money and property into it? Is not his income or profit derived from the combination of his brain and time and capital? It is said that the professional man is taxed under the income-tax law on his income and that it is unjust to levy another tax in the nature of an excess-profits tax on his income or profits, that it is double taxation. Is not the farmer, merchant, or manufacturer or other individual in trade or business taxed on his income under the income-tax law, and is not an excess-profits tax levied, in addition to the regular income tax, on his profits or income? If such a tax is just in case of the farmer, merchant, and manufacturer, why is it not just in case of the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would like for the gentleman to state whether or not any attention was paid to the number that might compose the business of a professional partnership? If there were six or seven members, there would be the same flat exemption as for two?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The six or seven would have the one exemption as a partnership for the purpose of this tax, which is in lieu of the excess-profits tax computed on the basis of capital invested, but when they divided their profits each of the six or seven would have an exemption under the income-tax law. Wherever a corporation or partnership or individual has no capital or only a nominal sum invested and is in trade or business, or in a profession, the corporation is given a $3,000 deduction and the individual or partnership a $6,000 deduction. All the net income derived from the business, trade, profession, or occupation in excess of the deduction is taxed 8 per cent.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask if this bill does not bear with special hardship on the man who happens to have the bulk of his property invested in the stock of a corporation?

Mr. KITCHIN. He would not pay any excess-profits tax on dividends received from a corporation subject to the tax.

Mr. HUSTED. I mean a corporation which is subject to the excess-profits tax, but which has not made any excessive-war profits. That man, a stockholder in that corporation, has relied upon the dividends on his stock during the prewar period for his livelihood. Now, that stock would bear a greater proportionate share of the burden than other property would bear, it seems to me, and that he would indirectly pay more in proportion than men who had their money invested in other classes of property.

Mr. KITCHIN. The excess-profits tax provision in this bill, as agreed on, does not take into consideration the difference between his profits before the war and his profits now, except as to the differential of 7 and 9 per cent on invested capital as a deduction, as I have before explained. This is not a war-profits tax, but it is an excess-profits tax.

Mr. HUSTED. For that reason it seems to me he would pay more than the man who had his money invested in other classes of property.

Mr. KITCHIN. Every man and every class of business, every partnership and every corporation, is paying more.

Mr. HUSTED. I realize that he is paying more than he did before the war, but it seems to me he is also paying more in proportion.

Mr. KITCHIN. The difference between this bill and a war-profits bill is that this bill taxes ability to pay to help carry on this war. It makes no difference whether a man was fortunate or unfortunate, whether he was prosperous or not before the war. The question presented in the bill as agreed on is what is his present ability to help pay to support this Government in its war struggle? If everybody had been as prosperous during the prewar period as now, there would be no excess profits to be taxed under the Senate bill as originally reported, and no money could have been raised from this source.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This excess-profits tax provision repeals the existing law, does it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that is the only case in which the existing law is repealed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it is repealed and the excess-profits tax provision of this bill is substituted for it—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Except, too, I think, the munitions tax—

Mr. KITCHIN. The munitions tax is effective until January 1, 1918, at 10 per cent instead of 12½ per cent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This act applies to the calendar year 1917, ending the last of next December?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Except in cases where a corporation may have a determined fiscal year?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is, in the case of a corporation whose fiscal year began in 1916, we have a provision that it shall not pay any excess-profits tax upon that portion of its earnings which it made in the calendar year 1916.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Only on that portion which they made during the calendar year 1917?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. That portion would be taxable.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Some questions have been asked by Members which it seems to me indicate that they do not quite understand about the prewar period as now fixed. Is this the fact or is it not, that the prewar period only counts in determining the question of whether you shall have a 9 per cent or a 7 per cent deduction?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It makes no difference what the actual receipts were in the prewar years, but only the proportion of the percentage that those receipts bore to the capital invested in those years?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is it exactly. In other words, if a corporation, copartnership, or individual had been making 8 per cent profit on the capital invested during those three prewar years—1911, 1912, and 1913—they would be entitled to a deduction of 8 per cent on the capital invested during the taxable year. If a man was making 8 per cent on $100,000 before the war, the deduction would be $8,000. If now he has $200,000 invested, he is entitled to a deduction of 8 per cent on that $200,000, or a $16,000 deduction before the tax applies. The tax applies only on the profits in excess of the deduction.

Mr. DARROW. In a case of an individual in business, where he has no capital stock, is there any way of arriving at his capital invested?

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman mean to take the case of a lawyer or doctor who makes $10,000, but who has not capital invested?

Mr. DARROW. Suppose a man has capital invested, but no capital stock?

Mr. KITCHIN. Then the deduction is based upon the capital invested, whether any stock was issued or not.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Section 209 uses the words: "nominal capital." Suppose a family is incorporated for a small amount of capital, and all they have is a trade-mark or the good will of a certain article. Suppose they could sell to-day that trade-mark for half a million dollars and they are only incorporated for $5,000. Would that come under that section?

Mr. KITCHIN. How much are they making?

Mr. DALLINGER. Suppose they are making net $100,000 and are only capitalized for $5,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say that that was not more than a nominal capital in the case the gentleman puts, and the corporation would pay under section 209.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that the gentleman a moment ago, in replying to a question, spoke of the annual net income. That word "net" is of great importance. How does the Government determine the net income?

Mr. KITCHIN. The net income is determined from the returns made under the income-tax law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any machinery outside of the returns under the income-tax law for determining the net capital?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the income-tax returns are not sufficient, we have a provision in this bill providing that the department can get any data that it sees fit in order to get at the excess-profits tax.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is already provided by law.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but we made it a little more specific.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman is through on that subject, I would like to ask him a question in regard to the postal rates.

Mr. KITCHIN. Very well.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Here is a postal card used almost universally in this country that can be classed as third-class mail or first-class mail. Is it the intention of the committee to make the sender of the postal card pay 2 cents, or can he mail them for 1 cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. All postal cards or post cards now going at 1 cent will have to pay 2 cents if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If a man takes the same postal card and puts it in an unsealed letter he can mail it for 1 cent. Was that the intention of the committee?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is not the intention of the committee; but would it not be foolish for a man to take a 1-cent postal card and put it in an unsealed envelope and place an additional 1 cent on the envelope?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If it is printed matter, under the gentleman's definition and his answer, it could be put in an unsealed letter and mailed as third-class matter. It would be so rated in the Post Office Department.

Mr. KITCHIN. Can not you write a circular letter as long as your arm and put it in an unsealed envelope?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You can; but under your bill you can not put it on a piece of paper outside of an unsealed letter.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that if he undertakes to take a post card, put it in an envelope, and send it, he will pay the 2-cent rate or he will be hauled up by the department. If he continues to do it afterwards, they will have him up in another way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let me tell the gentleman that this is not a joking matter. This is a card used in this country by every business firm which sends out thousands and millions of them by every mail every day.

Mr. KITCHIN. If he puts the postal card in an envelope he has got to pay 2 cents on it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If he does not write anything on it, he can mail it outside, can not he?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think they could mail it like they could a piece of pasteboard. Now, the gentleman may be absolutely right about this, but I do not think he is.

Now, let me get to another matter, which will be the last one I will discuss.

SECOND-CLASS POSTAGE RATES.

The House as it passed the bill established the zone system, making no distinction between that portion of the newspaper or magazine devoted to reading matter and that portion devoted to advertisements. It had one flat zone rate for the whole paper, advertising and reading matter. The House bill provided the following rates upon second-class mail matter: In the first zone, 1½ cents; second and third zones, 2 cents; fourth and fifth zones, 3 cents; sixth zone, 4 cents; seventh zone, 5 cents; and the eighth zone, 6 cents. It gave the publishers until March 1, 1918, to adjust their business before these final rates went into effect. The Senate struck this provision out. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, put in the McKellar amendment, which provided for the zone system and greatly increased the rates in all the zones beyond the third. It applied to the whole paper, making no distinction between reading and advertising matter. When the bill got back into the Senate the Senate struck it all out and left the postage rates on second-class matter as they are in existing law. The conferees, after three or four days of discussing the matter from every viewpoint, taking into consideration every argument that had been made against the zone system and increased rates, finally concluded that it was wise, just, and fair to establish the zone system so far as it relates to the advertising portion of the newspaper or magazine. In view of the enormous annual loss from second-class postage we thought it was just and right to increase the postage upon the reading portion of the newspaper one-half a cent a pound for all zones. That is to say, the reading portion of the paper or magazine, if this bill becomes a law, will pay at the flat rate of a cent and a half a pound. The zone system and zone rates will apply to the advertising portion. We give about four years after the passage of this bill before the full rates finally go into effect. The full rates will not go into effect until July 1, 1921. On July 1, 1918, one-quarter of this increase is put into effect. On July 1, 1919, another quarter is added; on July 1, 1920, another quarter is added; and on July 1, 1921, the fourth quarter is added. So there are three full years from July 1, 1918, before the full rates become operative. The conference committee thought—and I believe every intelligent man, when he stops to think, will come to the same conclusion—that the newspapers and magazines within four years, with such a small increase, can so adjust their business with the advertisers especially, and if not with them, then with the subscribers and the advertisers, so that the paper or magazine itself bear only a part, if any, of the increased rates.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just a moment. Newspapers that are maintained by and in the interests of religious, educational, charitable, scientific, agricultural, and labor organizations, no part of whose net income goes to the private benefit of any individual stockholder, will pay a flat increase of one-quarter of a cent a pound, and one-half of that quarter goes into effect on the 1st of July, 1918, and the other on the 1st of July, 1919.

The provisions with respect to the increased postage rates on second-class mail matter are as follows:

Sec. 1101. That on and after July 1, 1918, the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter (including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year) when sent by the publisher thereof from the post office of publication or other post office, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale:

(a) In the case of the portion of such publication devoted to matter other than advertisements shall be as follows: (1) On and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof; (2) on and after July 1, 1919, 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof.

(b) In the case of the portion of such publication devoted to advertisements the rates per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the several zones applicable to fourth-class matter shall be as follows (but where the space devoted to advertisements does not exceed 5 per cent of the total space the rate of postage shall be the same as if the whole of such publication was devoted to matter other than advertisements): (1) On and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 1½ cents; for the fourth zone, 2 cents; for the fifth zone, 2½ cents; for the sixth zone, 2½ cents; for the seventh zone, 3 cents; for the eighth zone, 3½ cents; (2) on and after July 1, 1919, and until July 1, 1920, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 2 cents; for the fourth zone, 3 cents; for the fifth zone, 3½ cents; for the sixth zone, 4 cents; for the seventh zone, 5 cents; for the eighth zone, 5½ cents; (3) on and after July 1, 1920, and until July 1, 1921, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 2½ cents; for the fourth zone, 4 cents; for the fifth zone, 4½ cents; for the sixth zone, 5½ cents; for the seventh zone, 7 cents; for the eighth zone, 7½ cents; (4) on and after July 1, 1921, for the first and second zones, 2 cents; for the third zone, 3 cents; for the fourth zone, 5 cents; for the fifth zone, 6 cents; for the sixth zone, 7 cents; for the seventh zone, 9 cents; for the eighth zone, 10 cents.

(c) With the first mailing of each issue of each such publication the publisher shall file with the postmaster a copy of such issue, together with a statement containing such information as the Postmaster General may prescribe for determining the postage chargeable thereon.

Sec. 1102. That the rate of postage on daily newspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, shall be the same as now provided by law; and nothing in this title shall affect existing law as to free circulation and existing rates on second-class mail matter within the county of publication: Provided, That the Postmaster General may hereafter require publishers to separate or make up to zones in such a manner as he may direct all mail matter of the second class when offered for mailing.

Sec. 1103. That in the case of newspapers and periodicals entitled to be entered as second-class matter and maintained by and in the interest of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations or associations, not organized for profit and none of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, the second-class postage rates shall be, irrespective of the zone in which delivered (except when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, in which case the rates shall be the same as now provided by law), 1½ cents a pound or fraction thereof on and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, and on and after July 1, 1919, 1½ cents a pound or fraction thereof. The publishers of such newspapers or periodicals before being entitled to the foregoing rates shall furnish to the Postmaster General, at such times and under such conditions as he may prescribe, satisfactory evidence that none of the net income of such organization inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

Sec. 1104. That where the total weight of any one edition or issue of any publication mailed to any one zone does not exceed 1 pound the rate of postage shall be 1 cent.

Sec. 1105. The zone rates provided by this title shall relate to the entire bulk mailed to any one zone and not to individually addressed packages.

Sec. 1106. That where a newspaper or periodical is mailed by other than the publisher or his agent or a news agent or dealer the rate shall be the same as now provided by law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD, and to append some tables which may prove instructive and useful in the study of the revenue bill as agreed on by the conference committee and which will soon become law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

APPENDIX C.

The following tables show the excess-profits tax to be paid by an individual or partnership and a corporation, each with a capital of $100,000 and a net income of $50,000, and with 7 and 9 per cent exemptions:

1. A corporation with $100,000 capital, a net income of $50,000, and an exemption of 7 per cent plus $3,000.

Rate (per cent).	Taxable income.	Tax.
20.....	$5,000	$1,000
25.....	5,000	1,250
35.....	5,000	1,750
45.....	8,000	3,600
60.....	17,000	10,200
Total.....	40,000	17,800

<sup>1</sup> It is estimated that when this tax is in full operation that the increased rates will yield $35,000,000 revenue annually additional.

<sup>2</sup> It is estimated that, when this tax is in full operation, the increased rates will yield $28,000,000 annually additional.

2. A corporation with $100,000 capital, a net income of $50,000, and an exemption of 9 per cent plus $3,000.

Rate (per cent).	Taxable income.	Tax.
20.....	$3,000	$600
25.....	5,000	1,250
35.....	5,000	1,750
45.....	8,000	3,600
60.....	17,000	10,200
Total.....	38,000	17,400

3. An individual or a partnership with $100,000 capital, a net income of $50,000, and an exemption of 7 per cent plus $6,000.

Rate (per cent).	Taxable income.	Tax.
20.....	$2,000	$400
25.....	5,000	1,250
35.....	5,000	1,750
45.....	8,000	3,600
60.....	17,000	10,200
Total.....	37,000	17,200

4. An individual or a partnership with $100,000 capital, a net income of $50,000, and an exemption of 9 per cent plus $6,000.

Rate (per cent).	Taxable income.	Tax.
20.....	$5,000	$1,250
25.....	5,000	1,750

<sup>1</sup> Incomes exempt from the normal tax under the act of Sept. 8, 1916, $3,000 in the case of single persons, and $4,000 in the case of married persons or heads of families.

<sup>2</sup> Incomes exempt from the normal tax under the act of Oct. 3, 1917, $1,000 in the case of single persons, and $2,000 in the case of married persons or heads of families.

<sup>3</sup> The total normal tax is 4 per cent on all incomes over $3,000 in the case of single persons, and $4,000 in the case of married persons; and 2 per cent on all incomes between $1,000 and $3,000 in the case of single persons, and $2,000 and $4,000 in the case of married persons or heads of families.

<sup>4</sup> The deduction is, (a) in the case of a domestic corporation, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $3,000; and (b) in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $6,000; in the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, an amount ascertained in the same manner as provided in subdivisions (a) and (b) without any exemption of $3,000 or $6,000.

<sup>5</sup> The deduction is, in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction.

<sup>6</sup> This tax will not be effective after Jan. 1, 1918. Under the act of Sept. 8, 1916, a tax of 12½ per cent upon the net profits received from the manufacture and sale of such articles in addition to the regular income tax. This was reduced to 10 per cent.

<sup>7</sup> The same additional rates as those levied upon distilled spirits.

<sup>10</sup> A tax equal to the additional tax imposed upon similar wines.

<sup>11</sup> A tax equal to one-half the additional taxes imposed under sections 400 or 401 of the act of Oct. 3, 1917.

<sup>12</sup> The amount paid for commutation or reason tickets for trips less than 30 miles, or for transportation the fare for which does not exceed 35 cents is not subject to the tax.

<sup>13</sup> A tax equivalent to one-half the tax imposed upon the articles enumerated in the items (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j) above.

<sup>14</sup> This tax does not apply to amounts paid as dues or fees to a fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system, and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents.

<sup>15</sup> If a premium is charged, the tax will be at the rate of 1 per cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged.

<sup>16</sup> If capital stock is issued without face value, the tax will be 5 cents per share unless the actual value is in excess of $100 per share, in which case the tax will be 5 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof.

<sup>17</sup> If the shares of stock are without par value, the tax will be 2 cents on the transfer or sale or agreement to sell of each share, unless the actual value thereof is in excess of $100 per share, in which case the tax will be 2 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof.

<sup>18</sup> The tax on conveyances does not apply to any instrument or writing given to secure a debt.

<sup>20</sup> The additional estate taxes do not apply to the transfer of the net estate of any decedent dying while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States during the continuance of the war in which the United States is now engaged, or if death results from injuries received or disease contracted in such service, within one year after the termination of such war.

<sup>21</sup> A tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon like articles of domestic manufacture.

<sup>22</sup> Letters written and mailed by soldiers, sailors, and marines assigned to duty in a foreign country engaged in the present war may be mailed free of postage, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to be brief, unless I am questioned for information on the bill, and I hope that each and every man who wants to get information upon the subject will study the report and the bill, so that the arguments here this afternoon may be as brief as possible and the bill pass to-day. I would like to see the bill pass without a record vote, but there are some gentlemen here who want to go on record, I believe.

First, I want to pay the chairman of the committee, Mr. KITCHIN, a compliment by saying that he has worked most diligently on this bill to perfect it, and to raise the necessary money without working a hardship upon any class of people.

There are but two really bad features in the bill, in my opinion. One of the definition of capital, and the other is the tax upon gross sales. I have bowed to the will of the majority, however, and shall continue to do so, and I say now that this is a fairly good bill. No revenue bill that has ever passed the Congress of the United States was perfect, and, so long as the Government maintains, there never will be one that is perfect. Some men are of different frame of mind than others. Some have advocated taking all income from everyone who has an income except themselves. I have received letters and telegrams saying, "I am in favor of the tax, but I am not in favor of the tax you are putting on me." I know of no one who desires to be taxed, but we are at war with a powerful people, and our Army must be supported in the field if we are to succeed in this war.

I believe we are raising more money by direct taxation than we should raise in that way. I think we ought to borrow more of the money needed to carry on this war than we are borrowing. I believe that we are raising by direct taxation a greater percentage of the money we are going to use in carrying on the war than was ever raised by any people in the world in a great war. I stated before on the floor of this House that during the Civil War we borrowed $5.09 for every $1 of direct taxation raised during that period. There is a vast difference whether my Government comes to me and borrows my money or takes it from me in taxes. If you tax me to the full limit of my wealth you have taken all I have except patriotism, but you may come during the strenuous times that exist during a time of war and borrow my money and give me collateral—Government bonds—upon which I can borrow more money and continue to do business. There is a vast difference between the two. I believe we are raising more money than we ought to raise now by direct taxes from the people.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman state how much we are now raising by direct taxes?

Mr. FORDNEY. It would be but an estimate. If this bill goes into effect as it is now before this House we will raise by direct taxes, together with money that will be raised under existing law, four and a quarter billion dollars during this year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask that question for this reason. The other day in debate, when estimates were being made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], it was stated that with the bill at that stage in the Senate we would be raising about 35 per cent of all our expenses by taxation. Since this bill has come back with substantial changes I should guess now it would require something like 40 per cent.

Mr. FORDNEY. I should say those figures are correct.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has not our estimate been greatly increased since the time to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; I refer to last week only.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Have they not been increased since then?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. FITZGERALD were not talking last week, but some two weeks ago, and they have been raised since then.

Mr. FORDNEY. Our expenses in this war are going to depend on the number of men we are going to send to the front, and no man at this present time can estimate the number of men we are going to need before this war closes in Europe. I have voted and I am going to continue to vote for every measure necessary to back up our Government in supporting our men on the battle field [applause], if it takes every dollar of our wealth. The definition of capital as given is, in my judgment, all wrong, for this reason: The exemptions allowed to capital are based upon the original capital invested, and I know of many institutions in this country which 20 or 30 years ago invested capital, and the value of property purchased at that time has greatly enhanced, and the only exemption that will be given under the terms of this law will be based upon the original capital invested, say, 20, 30, or 40 years ago, without any increase for interest or anything else.

Again, the tax imposed by this law upon gross sales is the wrong principle of taxation. You may tax a man very heavily on his income, but you do not under that sort of tax or kind of tax impair his original capital, whereas if you tax him 1 per cent or 2 per cent or 3 per cent or 5 per cent on his gross sales you may not only take all his profits, but a portion of his original capital. Therefore that tax is wrong in principle. Those are the two serious objections on my part to this bill. I tried to get them righted, but, as I have said, I bowed to the will of the majority. The bill is here and there is no possibility of changing it, my friends. Everybody in Congress wants to pass the necessary measures to aid the administration in carrying on this war and to get away home, and therefore I want to see this bill passed to-day. [Applause.] Therefore I shall take no further time of the House except to give here an illustration of the amount of taxes which will be paid by a corporation or partnership or individual in business with capital of $100,000 and a net income of $50,000.

If the pending bill is enacted into law, the following table shows the total amount of income, corporation, and excess-profits taxes that would be paid, (a) by a corporation with capital of $100,000 and net income of $50,000; (b) by a partnership of three parties with a capital of $100,000 and net income of $50,000; and (c) by an individual engaged in business with $100,000 capital and $50,000 of net profits.

(a) Corporation with capital of $100,000 and net income of $50,000. Deducting from net income 9 per cent of the capital (the maximum deduction) plus $3,000, or a total deduction of $12,000 shows the taxable income to be $38,000:

Tax on amount in excess of deduction and not over 15 per cent of capital, $3,000 at 20 per cent.....	$600
Tax on amount of profit in excess of 15 per cent of capital and not over 20 per cent, $5,000 at 25 per cent.....	1,250
Tax on amount in excess of 20 per cent of capital and not over 25 per cent, $5,000 at 35 per cent.....	1,750
Tax on amount in excess of 25 per cent and not over 33 per cent of capital, $8,000 at 45 per cent.....	3,600
Tax on amount in excess of 33 per cent of capital, $17,000 at 60 per cent.....	10,200

Total excess-profits tax.....	17,400
Net income.....	$50,000
Excess-profits tax.....	17,400

Net income subject to income tax.....	32,600..at 6 per cent..	1,956
Total tax.....		19,356

(b) Partnership of three parties with capital of $100,000 and net income of $50,000:

Deducting from net income 9 per cent of capital invested plus $6,000, or a total deduction of $15,000, shows the taxable income to be.....$35,000.00

Tax on amount of income in excess of deduction and not over 15 per cent of capital.....	0.00
Tax on amount of income in excess of 15 per cent, but not over 20 per cent of capital, $5,000 at 25 per cent.....	1,250.00
Tax on amount of income in excess of 20 per cent, but not over 25 per cent of capital, $5,000 at 35 per cent.....	1,750.00
Tax on amount of income in excess of 25 per cent, but not over 33 per cent of capital, $8,000 at 45 per cent.....	3,600.00
Tax on amount of income over 33 per cent of capital, $17,000 at 60 per cent.....	10,200.00

Total excess-profits tax.....	16,800.00
Net income.....	$50,000.00
Less excess-profits tax.....	16,800.00

Income for distribution.....	33,200.00
Share of each partner.....	11,067.00

Income tax of each partner:
$9,067 at 2 per cent.....	$181.34
$7,067 at 2 per cent.....	141.34
$2,500 at 1 per cent.....	25.00
$2,500 at 2 per cent.....	50.00
$1,067 at 3 per cent.....	32.01

Total for each.....	429.69
Total for all 3 (3 multiplied by $429.69), or.....	1,289.07

Total tax.....	18,089.07
----------------	-----------

(c) Individual engaged in business with capital of $100,000 and net income of $50,000:

The excess-profits tax would be the same as on a partnership, which is shown above to be.....$16,800

Net income.....	50,000
Deduct excess-profits tax.....	16,800

Income subject to income tax.....	33,200
-----------------------------------	--------

Income tax of individual on $33,200:

$31,200 at 2 per cent.....	$624
$29,200 at 2 per cent.....	584
$2,500 at 1 per cent.....	25
$2,500 at 2 per cent.....	50
$2,500 at 3 per cent.....	75
$2,500 at 4 per cent.....	100
$5,000 at 5 per cent.....	250
$13,200 at 8 per cent.....	1,056

Total income tax..... 2,764

Excess-profits tax (above shown)..... 16,800

Add total income tax..... 2,764

Total tax..... 19,564

The following tables show the excess-profits tax to be paid by an individual or partnership and a corporation, each with a capital of $100,000 and a net income of $50,000, and with 7 and 9 per cent exemptions:

1. A corporation with $100,000 capital, a net income of $50,000, and an exemption of 7 per cent plus $3,000.

Rate (per cent).	Taxable income.	Tax.
10.....	$5,000	$1,000
25.....	5,000	1,250
35.....	5,000	1,750
45.....	8,000	3,600
60.....	17,000	10,200
Total.....	40,000	17,800

2. A corporation with $100,000 capital, a net income of $50,000, and an exemption of 9 per cent plus $3,000.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the propriety of the suggestion made by my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and believe we might as well have a vote upon this bill at once. The luminous speech of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KIRCHIN] covers the situation about as fully perhaps as it can be covered in a speech, and although the House may not be so fully informed as it would like to be because of the length and intricacy of some of these legal definitions and administrative paragraphs, there is no possibility of defeating the bill at this time. The administration needs it, needs its immediate passage for the purposes of the war, and no minority here could stop it, even if it were so disposed.

In order that time may be saved I have reduced to writing the little I have to say as a member of this most important conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania, which I have the honor in part to represent, will be hit harder by this bill than any other State in the Union save one. The exigencies of war as set out by the President, however, make it inevitable that some such bill as this shall be passed. It is not a question of doing what we want to do, but of doing that which stern necessity compels us to do. The original position of the administration was that the expense of this war might be borne half by taxes and half by loans, but while we have already authorized expenditures aggregating approximately $19,000,000,000 and have authorized loans exceeding $13,000,000,000, we have not yet resorted to the taxing power except as to such taxes as were imposed prior to the declaration of war. The President has gone into this war wholeheartedly, and Congress has undertaken to support him; it can not longer postpone the levying of taxes to pay the expenses, or at least a part of the expenses, which the administration is incurring.

The present bill will not be pleasing to anybody. Tax bills never are. It may be that some Members of the House or Senate may be impelled to oppose certain paragraphs of this bill, or they may think it does not go far enough. From my point of view it is too late now to prevent the passage of this bill. It has been fought over in the House and Senate for a period of five months, and has been in conference between the two Houses for more than two weeks. No conferees have labored more earnestly to harmonize conflicting opinions about a bill than those who have reported this one.

While I do not approach a discussion of the bill with any enthusiasm and am dissatisfied with many of its provisions, I believe it has come out of conference in far better shape than it left either of the two Houses. Some of the objectionable features introduced upon the floor of both Houses have been eliminated, and as a result of conference the taxes have been more equitably distributed than they otherwise would have been.

Retroactive taxes have been cut out of the bill. The obnoxious light and heat taxes, which would have extended to the occupants of small homes, have also been dropped. Tea and coffee are not taxed; neither is sugar. These would have been direct consumption taxes, but they have been knocked out of this bill. It is not improbable we shall have to resort to such taxes in another bill next session, but they have been avoided thus far. And then the individual who makes excess profits has been included in this bill. Unless there is a flaw somewhere that will mean that the man who is making excess profits out of farm products, including cotton, will pay his share of excess-profits taxes. In other words, the tax on profits has been broadened so that certain middle men and speculators in food-stuffs not heretofore included are now covered.

If farmers making excess profits were cut out of the bill in the House, and lawyers or professional men making excess profits were exempted by the Senate, they have both been included in the bill in conference. The individual cotton planter or farmer making profits in excess of $6,000 is now taxable as corporations are taxable, and the lawyer or professional man is taxable at the rate of 8 per cent upon his excess profits. The bill is drastic, as it was expected to be. Directly or indirectly it levies a burden upon producer and consumer, as it also attempts to reach the middleman in proportions as fair perhaps as the needs of the Treasury will permit.

Corporations and what is denominated "big business" may not be satisfied with the rates of taxation imposed upon them or with the definition of capital as it effects exemptions. They will have to pay income tax, corporation tax, a tax upon excess profits, a tax upon surplus in certain cases, and they will have to keep a system of accounts that will be almost intolerable to some of them; but if the big corporation deems itself hard hit it will have the satisfaction of knowing that smaller corporations and individuals are expected to share burdens in like proportion and in some instances under conditions less advantageous.

I do not propose to attempt a discussion of the details of the bill; that is a task which will plague even the financial experts. Some of them doubtless will attack the law and undertake to evade some of its provisions, but that is a matter upon which a subsequent session of Congress will be better informed than this. There is one provision of the bill which will undoubtedly awaken a lively discussion, because those who are most concerned will be in position to criticize it, viz, the second-class postage provision. Some newspapers and periodicals will find fault with the effort in this bill to reduce the deficiency due to the mailing of second-class matter. But if second-class rates have been raised, first-class mail rates have also been raised, thus placing an additional burden upon all users of the mails. It is to be noted that the new rates affect principally the magazines and metropolitan newspapers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not at this time. The gentleman will pardon me for a moment.

The special privileges of the country newspapers are preserved, and there is an exception, perhaps not satisfactory to them, in the case of religious publications. Fraternal publications, not issued for profit, can not complain of the bill. While the postal rates upon second-class matter might have been lowered without offense to the Treasury, it is fair to the conferees to observe that the new rates do not take effect until the end of the fiscal year, so that all newspapers and magazines will have eight months' time in which to regulate their contracts and adjust themselves to the new conditions. After that the increase in rate is gradual, extending over a period of years.

I shall vote for this bill, not because I like it but because it is a measure of necessity forced by the war. It will undoubtedly disturb business, as it will cut profits. It may work extreme hardship in many directions, but the President has pointed out that profits must not be put above patriotism and that the sinews of war must be ungrudgingly provided.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sorry I can not yield to my friend from Wisconsin, because in this one minute I would like to bear testimony to the ability, the energy, and the courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who, in my judgment, knows more about this bill than any other man in the House. [Applause.] He has surprised us by his grasp of Treasury details and has proved up in conference as a match for the financial experts.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] will always be the leader of this House. I believe the storm is rising that will sweep him and his party out of power. I believe that storm will break during the next 16 months. But if it should happen that this distinguished and forceful chairman of the Ways and Means Committee should ever decide to depart from the sylvan surroundings at Scotland Neck and hand up his shingle amongst the corporation-law practitioners of the great metropolis of New York he would take high rank amongst them, and his fortune would be made interpreting this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record. I want to print an exact example of how much will be collected under this bill on a given amount of capital, so that the gentlemen may see it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will say in the beginning, for fear that somebody may say I am unduly criticizing the bill, that I do not propose to criticize it much and that possibly I had best keep my tongue still.

I shall vote for the bill. I am following the lead of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and other members of the conference committee. I put in an anxious day yesterday. I did not say my prayers or read a chapter in the Bible or go to church. I tried to get outside of the conference report. I went to bed at 1 o'clock this morning. I did not have any help present on Sunday, nor did I have any of the acts of Congress to which I could refer, but I arrived at the conclusion that I did not know how many lawsuits were to grow out of this bill, and that I did not know in many respects what it is to do. I hope it will produce a large amount of money, and I believe it will. I hope when another bill comes—and, God knows, if this war does not close inside of 12 months another bill will come—I hope that that bill will be such that all of us experts and non-experts can see what it does. This bill harks back and refers to provisions in the Payne tariff law, the Underwood tariff law, the law of 1916, which is not repealed except in spots, the law of last March, which was repealed very largely, if not entirely, although I think not quite entirely. And I will confess that I do not believe that, unaided, I could get outside of it in three months. I wish that there had been time so that this bill could tell its own story upon its face, disregarding the law of 1916, the Underwood tariff law, the Payne tariff law, and the law of last March, repealing here and there a section or a clause or modifying it or amending it. I think that these people, by the time another bill is to be introduced, can give us one that will tell its own story on its face.

The next bill will carry more of consumption taxes than this. We are going to take a large amount of what is called excess profits and war profits from those that made them while we were neutral. I am not complaining about it. I do not have any of those profits, nor do my constituents. Although in common with you, with your salaries of $7,500 a year and the business that you have, we will find that under the term of excess profits that you and your constituents, whether manufacturers or farmers, whoever they may be, will have to pay what you call excess-profits tax.

I know from the number of letters I get wanting explanation that there is going to be kicking here, and there, and yonder. But after all, the great mass of the people realize the necessity for revenue and the maintenance of our credit, because we have got to borrow. If the war lasts a year or 18 months longer we will have to borrow $18,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000. But I believe that we will maintain our credit, that we will keep it at a parity with gold. We will bear all our burdens whether they be in the Army or whether they be in civil life. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the conferees on the part of the House for what they have accomplished. They have brought back to us the House bill in the main, upon the plan substantially that was proposed originally in this House. What is called the "retroactive income tax" has gone out, perhaps properly. The taxes on light, heat, and power have gone out, very properly, as I think; and I am glad to say that the taxes which were proposed by the Senate on tea, coffee, and sugar, to which I was very much opposed, have also gone out, together with a provision which the Senate inserted repealing the tax on munition makers.

The conferees have also raised the amount and rates of the excess-profits taxes, from which it is now intended there should be derived through this measure $1,110,000,000. I highly approved their course in this respect, except that I must add, in my opinion, they did not go far enough in raising the rates or the amount of excess-profits taxes or the total amount of the bill. I say this notwithstanding the income-tax rates have been graduated up, so that a total of 66 per cent will be imposed on incomes above $1,000,000, and the rates on excess profits under the conference report are graded up to 60 per cent on a profit in excess of 41 per cent. These figures are not exact, as certain allowances must be made in each case, but they are sufficiently accurate for the purposes of this discussion.

This bill, when it left the House, carried about $1,800,000,000. The Senate raised it to about $2,400,000,000. At the time it was under discussion in the House it was vehemently contended by some Members that we had no use for the amount of money that it provided, and that there was no necessity for levying taxation to that amount. Some even contended that under no circumstances ought we to pass a bill that would levy more than $1,000,000,000 of taxation. It is not necessary to discuss that point now. The march of events has brought us far beyond that. Before the bill came out of the Senate committee it was evident that the estimate would have to be largely revised, and the Senate very properly increased it something like $500,000,000; and recently the gentleman from New York [Mr. FRIZGEBALD], who is one of the very best informed, if not the best informed, Members as to the amount of money that the Government would need, stated that, taking the amount of the bond bill and this bill together, we still would be short the sum of $2,682,000,000. Since that time the estimates have been raised nearly a billion dollars, until it now appears that we will need at least $3,500,000,000 more before the end of this fiscal year.

How is this money to be raised? Whence are we to obtain the amount of this enormous deficit? The conferees added something like $200,000,000, or a little over that amount, to this bill, but that is far from being sufficient. I think the bill ought to provide a larger amount. [Applause.] The conferees have not added one-tenth part of the additional amount which we will require before the end of the fiscal year. Is it intended that the balance shall be raised by bonds? If so, I want to warn the House and the country that we are entering upon a career of inflation that will end in a financial debauch from which we will not recover in 20 years.

The bill was originally prepared on what was called the "fifty-fifty" plan; that is, with the expectation of obtaining one-half of our war expenses through taxes. The demands of the war have been so insatiable that it is now evident that we can not follow this plan or take any definite percentage as the ratio between taxes and war expenses, but I am in favor of raising the largest amount by taxation that can be imposed without injuring business or affecting business enterprise. I am not in favor of injuring business, and no man in this House is. Everyone realizes that we could not carry on this war successfully if business were destroyed. But let us not be frightened by this cry that business will be destroyed unless there is some reason for it besides the bare assertion.

Gentlemen have pointed out that the percentage that we are raising by taxation of our total expense for war is larger than it was at the time of the Civil War, and it has been claimed that it is larger than it is in England. But those comparisons are fallacious. The total amount of wealth in this country is nearly $250,000,000,000. Our per capita wealth is about $2,500. The total wealth of England is only about $85,000,000,000. Its per capita wealth is probably less than $2,000. And yet England is imposing a taxation at this time of something like $65 per capita, while we are only imposing a taxation of a little over $40 per capita.

At the time of the Civil War our per capita wealth, at the beginning, was only a little over $500. At the close of the war, in 1865, it was around $600. It is now, as I have already stated, more than four times that amount. These figures, gentlemen, instead of showing that we can not raise as large a proportion of our war expenses as this bill carries, show that we ought to raise a still greater proportion on account of our increased wealth as a Nation and individually.

The experience of Salmon P. Chase, who acted as Secretary of the Treasury during the most of the Civil War, led him to state that $1 raised by taxation was worth $2 raised by bonds. The proportion may not always be correct, but as a general principle never were truer words spoken. If you wish to see how bond issues operate for inflation, look abroad. From the warring nations inflation has overflowed into our own land, resulting largely from their tremendous borrowings and expending the money here. A Government bond operates to a certain extent as a sort of fiat money. It creates property where none existed before; it affords a basis for the issue of additional currency, and with each succeeding issue of bonds the general level of prices is raised. The evils of this system are plain. The Government not only is compelled to pay double and often treble the price for materials that had prevailed before, but, worst of all, the unfortunate consumer, the man whose whole yearly income has been required to obtain the necessities of life for himself and family, finds that here also prices have been enormously inflated until his life becomes a mere struggle for existence. In another year more loans will be required. Gentlemen sometimes speak as if no portion of the financial burdens of this war was cast upon the workingman and the man with a small salary. I insist that notwithstanding all we may do to reduce food prices, he is already more heavily loaded than he ought to be. It must be remembered, too, that all of this inflation has to be paid for sometime and some way. Either business will eventually pay for it or the workingman, or both, when the reaction finally comes, as come it must. I firmly believe that the total amount of the bill should have been raised higher, and that this additional revenue should be derived from higher taxes on excess profits or war profits, whichever you may choose to call them. When the bill was originally before the House I then stated on this floor that I favored raising the excess-profits rates. Now that the bill carries so much larger an amount and should be, as I think, further increased, the necessity of an increase in the excess-profits rates is still further apparent. It is said that to increase these rates on excess profits will injure business, prevent further investments, and lessen the amount to be collected another year. I deny this and offer proof in support of this denial.

No better evidence ought to be desired than the conditions in foreign countries, where higher rates of taxation than are even now proposed have been levied. England has been levying a flat excess-profits rate of 60 per cent, which this year was increased to 80 per cent. We would not think of imposing the last-named rate upon any profits except those that were inordinate and utterly unreasonable. I have already stated the higher rate of taxation per capita which prevails in England. Have these rates destroyed business in England? The contrary is true. Notwithstanding business was extremely flourishing in England before the war and a time of unusual prosperity existed, business is so much more prosperous than it was before the war that England could take last year $700,000,000 away from its excessive profits and still leave them 40 per cent higher than they had been before the war. I am reliably informed that recently a canvass was made of about 1,000 corporations engaged in all kinds of business in the United Kingdom, and it was found with few and rare exceptions that these concerns were highly prosperous, even after deducting the excess-profits tax.

Every Member of the House has heard that Mr. Henry Selfridge, formerly a member of the firm of Marshall Field & Co., went to London some years ago and started a great department store on the American plan. At the opening of the war British merchants were panic-stricken. They would not buy. But Mr. Selfridge, with that unerring business instinct that has always characterized him, saw the future more accurately. He laid in additional stocks and prepared for the business that came as he prophesied it would. His sales and profits have been increasing every year since the war began. For the year ending January 31, 1914, the profits of his company were, in round numbers, $655,000; for the year ending the same date 1917, $1,115,000. Harrods, another great establishment, reports the largest and most profitable business in its history for the six months ending January 31, 1917. The Jewelers & Silversmiths' Corporation, another great concern, reports large gains over any previous year. Hooper Bros., a large men's-wear house, reports great increase in sales, and so on.

Mr. PLATT. That is under an excess-profits law, and there is no excess-profits tax under this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not going to discuss technicalities.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman may call this a technicality if he wants to. Is there any real comparison at all between the English excess-profits tax and the taxes in this bill? It seems to me they are as different as day is from night.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The provision in this bill is a tax on profits, and whether you call it an excess-profits tax or a war-profits tax is immaterial. It taxes profits above an average of 8 per cent. It is a fair proposition and is based on the provisions for a tax on excess profits contained in the original House bill. The principal difference is that the rates are now graded. The English plan, which was contained in the Senate bill when reported by the Finance Committee of that body, could not stand the test of argument, and that committee itself was compelled to go back practically to the plan contained in the House bill, which was so strongly assailed by some Members of the House. I opposed the English plan for tax on excess profits in the House and confess to some gratification that my judgment has been vindicated by its abandonment. Under the English plan, some of the companies making the greatest profits, such as some of the Standard Oil concerns, the Ford Co., and many others would have paid little or no tax on their enormous profits.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. At the time we were all receiving letters from men who said that their business was going to be destroyed if they were to be taxed along the lines of the House bill, one letter that I received, different from any of the others, was from Mr. George H. Allan, a journeyman printer, who was a member of a typographical union in Yonkers, N. Y.

It is right along the line of your remarks. While the others were writing the other way, he says this:

I think, as a patriotic American, that printers and all workmen earning $25 weekly and above should be taxed during the duration of the war. Union printers are taxed in their union the entire year (1½ per cent in New York), and I think we could stand it if our Government should see fit to do so.

[Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He is a patriotic citizen. When a workman writes like this, we ought to hear no complaints from men of wealth.

Resuming my argument, I would say that there is no occasion for alarm through fear that business will not prosper during the war.

The fact is that the enormous disbursements by the Government, which in this country will amount to more than $10,000,000,000 this fiscal year, affords an extraordinary stimulus to business which far outweighs the effect of such taxation. In this country the corporate profits for the calendar year of 1917 will probably exceed the average of the three years prior to the war by $4,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000. We shall not take one-third of this increase; in fact, when we consider that the tax under the present plan of the bill is to be levied also on those corporations which were heretofore prosperous, the proportion will not exceed one-fourth. Business was not destroyed or ruined in the three years before the war. How is it possible to claim that when the corporations of this country after this tax is deducted will still have a large increase in their profits over what they received before the war that business is going to be injured. The principle of an excess-profits tax is that it takes only from such business as can afford it and always leaves a considerable sum above what might be deemed a normal or reasonable profit. Gentlemen forget that this tax is only a per cent of a per cent; that upon small concerns with moderate profits it amounts to little more than an occupation tax. It is only where the profits amount to a high figure that any corporation will really be affected thereby.

Gentlemen say that if we increase the amount of taxation upon these big business concerns and upon incomes that we will leave nothing for investment. I do not understand the logic or the reasoning of this statement. Whatever is paid in taxes will by just that much reduce the amount of bonds required. Can anyone tell me if a hundred dollars or a thousand dollars is taken by way of taxation, why it will not leave just as much for investment in business as if the same amount were used through purchase of bonds? Not only will there be as much left for investment but the Government will pay a lower rate of interest, inflation will be to some degree checked, and the burden upon the Nation collectively will be greatly lessened.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Just for a brief question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we continue to issue bonds, will we not continue to have to raise taxes to pay the interest on those bonds?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly; and if we raise the money by taxation we will not need the bonds, and we will not have to pay any interest, which is the point I understand the gentleman to make.

Nor can I understand the argument of gentlemen who contend that we should not advance our rates at once to those now levied by England, because England has arrived at that point by successive steps. Is a corporation or individual less able to pay taxes now because taxes have not been paid in the past? Does the fact that the absence of taxation heretofore has enabled the creation of a great surplus lessened the power now to contribute to the Nation's needs? Gentlemen of the House, these arguments will not bear analysis. Instead of arguing against the levying of similar taxes to those now imposed in England, the whole reasoning is in favor of it.

So far I have refrained from anything that might in the least appeal to sentiment or emotion, and the cold facts would seem to be sufficient without anything else. But there is another side to the picture. Gentlemen who have shown the condition of the masses under the tremendously inflated prices of the times and have pointed to the swollen profits of the Steel Trust, the Du Pont Powder Co., and others have sometimes been accused of fomenting class hatred and prejudice. Certainly this is far from my purpose. On the contrary, I am striving with all the energy in my power to prevent their growth by the only means possible—that of removing the cause. There is no more to this insinuation than the charge that this is a rich man's war, a charge which is equally baseless. The wealthy men of this country did not bring about the unprovoked attack upon Belgium, the devastation of that unhappy country, and the enslavement of its men and women; they did not cause the waves to be strewn with the helpless passengers of the Lusitania; they had nothing to do with the murder of citizens upon the decks of our own ships and under our own flag; and they could not have been connected in plots to involve us in wars with Japan and Mexico. We have taken men for our fighting force from all classes alike, except that the law properly enlarges the exemptions of the poor. We have striven to equalize the demands and burdens of the war so far as our fighting force is concerned. We have not been able to do this completely because in the nature of things it is impossible; but why should we not, so far as we are able, place the financial burdens of the war where they can best be borne and supply them whenever we can from excessive and unusual profits mostly brought about by war conditions?

Wealth can be measured by dollars and property by metes and bounds; but life and health and strength and heart blood are priceless and we are taking them without stint. Out in my district and all over the land the young tenant farmers are being taken from their crops, the young business men from their stores, the young lawyers and doctors from their practice. We are not only compelling them to leave their business to ruin but we will soon be asking them to endure the freezing waters of winter trenches, to struggle through barbed-wire entanglements swept by the hail of bullets from machine guns; to endure the terrific bombardment of the giant guns which the Germans have produced, and our hearts beat with pride as we see the loyalty and patriotism with which they have responded to the call. Do you now tell me that the merchant princes of the country will sit and whine and whimper and protest because we are proposing to take a percentage of their profits above 10 per cent? If so, God help the Nation, for the men best able to assist are failing it.

Foreigners who have traveled in this country and associated with the wealthy classes have somewhat slightly referred to our country as the land of the dollar, and characterized us as a money-grubbing people. There may have been some foundation for this slur. For fifty years we have had for the most part extraordinary prosperity in business which has resulted in a wonderful increase in the wealth of the Nation. This has not served to develop the finer instincts of our nature but rather has tended to foster a love of ease and pleasure and a desire for wealth and power. Getting and spending, getting and spending, we have passed our lives away. In the mad scramble for wealth and the fierce struggles of competition, the poor, the weak, and the friendless have too often been ground between the upper and the nether millstones.

But, Mr. Speaker, I refuse to believe that sordid instincts have become ingrained in the nature of our business men. The parties who now throng the lobbies of the hotels of this city protesting against this bill do not represent the great body of our business men. They have given, since this war began, too many evidences to the contrary. This is a different hour, a new day, a nobler era. War is not without its compensations, and through the dark clouds of this dreadful conflict some stars still shine. They point to paths that shall lead us to loftier regions where humanity shall be placed above profits and patriotism above gain, and then, when the sun of peace shines again, from a soil that is drenched with blood and tears, there will rise the spirit of a new America, true to the highest traditions of the past and dedicated to the loftiest purpose for the future. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill because there are two things that we need in the war; one is an Army and another is its support. I can not well conceive how, having deliberately entered into a war, raised an army, and after four months of deliberation over the method of maintaining that army, men can find a way to say that it shall not be maintained.

I am in favor of paying very largely for the support of the war by taxation, because the burdens of posterity will be heavy enough indeed. We know that borrowed money, whether by men or nations, is usually spent more lavishly than earned or saved funds. The proposition that the House Members started out with, to raise 50 per cent of the expenses of the war by taxation, met my hearty approval. For that reason I supported with a good deal of enthusiasm the bill as it left the House. The amount raised in the House bill provided for 50 per cent of the then estimated appropriations. The bill went to the Senate. It is now back here, having been transformed in conference. I want to recall the position I took when the bill was referred to the conference committee.

I here quote a colloquy between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and myself:

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. The House committee drafted this bill with reference to a fifty-fifty basis, and approximated that in its bill, did it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; a fifty-fifty basis in this bill.

Mr. SLOAN. I mean 50 per cent of war expenses to be met by taxation and 50 per cent by bond issue.

Mr. KITCHIN. That was the measure approximately created.

Mr. SLOAN. I understood that was the demand of the country, the recommendation of the Executive, and it was what was accomplished in the Ways and Means Committee. It was accomplished at the time over the vigorous opposition of the gentleman from Michigan, so that the threat of the gentleman from Michigan about going up against his fighting qualities has not the terrors it used to have. [Laughter.] As I understand, the Senate has changed it to 35 per cent tax and 65 per cent bond issue.

Mr. KITCHIN. Approximately.

Mr. SLOAN. Thirty-five per cent tax and 65 per cent bonds. Now, I know the impossibility of approximating fifty-fifty in this conference. The latitude between the House and Senate bills will not permit it with the conference rules. But there are a number of opportunities to increase measurably the Senate bill. One is, of course, where we are allowing hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of goods to come through our ports every year without a dollar being paid for the privilege. That is one of the discards of the Senate. There are others we might speak of. I think it is the opinion of the country and of a majority of this House that the Senate bill should be measurably increased in so far as the relative conditions of the two bills will authorize it. We hear very frequently stated that a large part of the burdens of the war should be placed on posterity because the war has been declared by us. Posterity was not present or consulted and may or may not hereafter approve its involuntary representation in that declaration. We are taking undue liberties with posterity and seeking to place a 65 per cent tax on them and assuming only 35 per cent ourselves. The testator who wills a mortgage in favor of his legatee may be thanked. To bequeath a mortgage for the legatee to pay may not excite great gratitude.

By this is indicated that it was the will of this House that in so far as the conference committee had the authority and jurisdiction it should increase the amount to be raised by the bill over what the Senate had fixed. I am pleased to see that the conferees came out with at least a part of my expectation in that regard. The increase amounts to about $150,000,000.

The following is an estimate of the revenue the bill will raise. It will be noted that nearly three-fourths of it is from income tax and excess profits:

REVENUE EXPECTED.

Revised figures indicating the revenues to be derived under the various paragraphs of the war-tax bill are as follows:

Income tax	$851,000,000
Excess profits	1,000,000,000
Distilled spirits	135,000,000
Rectified spirits	5,000,000
Fermented liquors	46,000,000
Wines	7,000,000
Soft drinks, sirups, etc.	13,000,000
Cigars	10,000,000
Cigarettes	21,500,000
Tobacco	28,000,000
Snuff	1,800,000
Cigarette papers	100,000
Freight transportation	77,500,000
Express transportation	10,000,000
Passenger transportation	60,000,000
Pipe lines	4,500,000
Seats and berths	4,000,000
Telegraph and telephone messages	7,000,000
Insurance policies	5,000,000
Automobiles	40,000,000
Musical instruments	3,000,000
Moving-picture films	3,000,000
Jewelry	4,500,000
Sporting goods	1,200,000
Pleasure boats	500,000
Perfumes and cosmetics	1,900,000
Patent medicines	3,400,000
Chewing gum	400,000
Cameras	750,000
Admissions	50,000,000
Club dues	1,500,000
War stamp taxes	29,000,000
Inheritances	5,000,000
Virgin Island products	20,000
First-class mail	70,000,000
Second-class mail	6,000,000

There are two features of this report I desire to advert to. The first is, the elimination of all tariff duties by the conference committee. When I say that I do not speak of the doctrine of protection or anything that might be made a party controversy, but I do refer to the loss of large amount of revenues practically surrendered to the foreigner and no compensating benefit to us. I shall show what portion of the support of all of our other glorious wars was paid by taxes raised at the ports and taxes raised upon the industries at home.

I am a little old-fashioned and have not gotten up, or, rather, fallen down, to the point far enough to subscribe to the doctrine that I see put in operation so often nowadays, that whatever was glorious in the history of America is wrong, all that made us great and strong should be discarded, and that there is no virtue in any legislative process unless it is in a change. And so I believe that a mistake was made in eliminating from this bill about $200,000,000 that should have been raised at the ports, not in terms of the House provision, but in any reasonable modification. We know the latitude taken by the conferees on many other provisions of this bill and which will be acquiesced in.

The 10 per cent flat on all imports did not meet my approval. Of course we could have raised two or three hundred million dollars of duties at our ports without collecting taxes on sugar, tea, or coffee. It would not on all other imports probably have made 1 per cent difference in the matter of price to our consumers, because the expense of producing an article for the last six months, for that matter for the last three years, has not been a base for its selling price. It has been based simply on what could be grabbed, and therefore we could just as well have during the last three years raised nearly $1,000,000,000 additional revenue for this Government if we had said to the foreigner who desired to enter our ports with his products, "When you bring something to American shores let it bow to the American flag and pay tribute to the United States Treasury." [Applause on the Republican side.]

When this measure was before the House I submitted a few facts and figures, which I quote:

In 1793, when our Treasury was empty, we collected $4,255,306.56 at our ports, and in internal revenue only $337,705.70. That was under Washington. The system was inaugurated and carried to success by the matchless Hamilton, who divides honor with the Father of his Country in the successful beginning our Republic made. Under Jefferson, in 1801, our total revenue was $12,945,455.95, of which there was collected at the ports $10,750,778.93 and only $1,048,033.43 in internal revenue. Eighty-three per cent under Jefferson was collected at the ports and 8 per cent in internal revenue.

The War of 1812 was fought under Madison, a Democratic President. The total amount of revenue collected was $14,340,709.95, of which $13,224,000 were customs dues and only $4,755 internal-revenue taxes, 92 per cent customs, 8 per cent all others, internal revenue being only three one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

In 1831, under President Jackson, the customs revenue was $21,922,000 and the internal revenue $12,160,62—88 per cent customs and only five one-hundredths of 1 per cent internal revenue.

In 1847, Polk's administration, during the Mexican War, total ordinary revenue $26,467,703.16. Of that sum $23,747,864.66, or 89 per cent, came from customs, while only $375, or one fifteen-hundredth of 1 per cent, came from internal revenue.

In 1863, Lincoln's administration, Civil War period, total ordinary revenue, $112,094,945.57. Customs, $69,059,642.40, or 61 per cent; internal revenue, $37,640,787.95, or 33 per cent. It was thus apportioned in the turning point of the great war for national existence.

In 1872, Grant's administration, total ordinary revenue, $374,106,867.56; customs, $216,370,286.77, or 57 per cent of total; and internal revenue, $130,642,177.72, or 34 per cent of total. This was good enough under the soldier-President administration.

In 1886, Cleveland's administration, total ordinary revenue, $336,439,727.06; customs, $192,905,023.44, or 57 per cent of total; internal revenue, $116,805,936.48, or 34 per cent of total. So it was under a constitutional Democratic President.

In 1898, McKinley's administration, Spanish-American War, total ordinary revenue, $405,321,335.20; customs, $149,575,062.35, or 36 per cent of total; internal revenue, $170,900,641.45, or 42 per cent of total. So we fought and won that glorious war.

In 1910, Taft's administration, total ordinary revenue, $675,511,715.02; customs, $333,653,445.03, or 49 per cent of total; internal revenue, $289,933,519.45, or 44 per cent of total.

In 1915, Wilson's administration, total ordinary revenue, $697,910,827.58; customs, $209,786,672.21, or 30 per cent of total; internal revenue, $415,669,646, or 59 per cent of total. Alas the degeneracy of these recent years when "equal rights are accorded to some and special privileges to foreigners."

Estimated revenue, 1918—United States.

Total ordinary revenue	$1,235,550,000
This House bill	1,800,000,000
Total	3,035,550,000
Estimated customs	230,000,000
This bill—customs	200,000,000
Total (or 14 per cent)	430,000,000
Estimated revenue for 1918, including the ordinary receipts and the proceeds of bill as presented in conference report
Customs	$230,000,000
Internal	3,837,500,000
Total ordinary	4,067,500,000

Customs amounts to 5.6 per cent.
Internal amounts to 94.4 per cent.

Great Britain—War finances.

Total revenue	$2,570,525,000
Customs (or 13 per cent)	352,805,000

Canada—War finances.

Total ordinary receipts	25,819,422,222.52

Customs, 49 per cent of total ordinary receipts.
Internal revenue, 41 per cent of total ordinary receipts.

Receipts of United States, 1791 to 1913, both inclusive.

Customs	$12,039,620,889.89
Internal	9,322,492,929.67
Total ordinary	23,607,173,675.74

Customs, 55 per cent of total ordinary receipts.
Internal revenue, 39 per cent of total ordinary receipts.

The foregoing was before it became fashionable for those in power to condemn as wrong the policies under which we won wars and triumphed in peace.

Receipts, 1914, 1915, and 1916.

Customs	$715,292,532.35
Internal	1,308,412,682.08
Total ordinary	2,212,248,546.78

Customs, 32 per cent of total ordinary receipts.
Internal revenue, 59 per cent of total ordinary receipts.
This bill of $1,800,000,000 total will produce in customs $200,000,000, or 11 per cent.

The other proposition that I desire to speak of is a matter of commendation of the courage, if not the justice, of the conferees representing the House. When it was early suggested that we should collect more taxes, or, rather, reduce our losses on the matter of carrying the second-class mails in this country, I thought it was a matter over which this committee ought not to assume jurisdiction. I opposed it for that reason. But when the Ways and Means Committee proceeded to raise revenue that way, and it became the settled policy, there has been, if you follow its history, a matter of courage, almost a matter of heroism, on the part of the committee in resisting the pleas, blandishments, and threats of those who were being called upon to pay a more equitable amount for the service the Government renders in transportation of their products.

It has been an interesting matter to follow. First, it was proposed by the standing committee to raise the present flat rate 200 per cent, which would have been absolutely unjust. The House bill was a change to a zone system, with no discrimination as to reading matter and advertisements. Intelligence, news, opinion, entertainment, and instruction, perhaps, should go over this country at the same price per 100 miles as for 1,000 miles. But advertisements which carry no intelligence, except a spur to cupidity, should pay the same as any other commodity. So in this bill we have the result of the evolution of the original plan in the increase of the rate for reading matter, which is to be ultimately raised 50 per cent. In other words, to remain 1 cent per pound, as at present, until July 1, 1918, then to 1½ cents till July 1, 1919, and thereafter 1½ cents per pound. Advertising matter is to be compelled to pay for its carriage as follows:

This amendment makes the zones applicable to fourth-class matter applicable to the portion of second-class matter devoted to advertisements where the percentage of space devoted to advertisements exceeds 5 per cent of the total space of the publication. The rates of postage upon the portion of such publications devoted to advertisements provided by this amendment are as follows:

Zone.	On and after—			After July 1, 1921 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).
	July 1, 1918, to July 1, 1919 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).	July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).	July 1, 1920, to July 1, 1921 (cents per pound or fraction thereof).
1 and 2.....	1½	1½	1½	2
3.....	1½	2	2½	3
4.....	2	3	4	5
5.....	2½	3½	4½	6
6.....	2½	4	5½	7
7.....	3	5	7	9
8.....	3½	5½	7½	10

When that is done no transportation company can complain. The Government can not complain. And no periodical publisher should complain if he is simply to pay for the carriage of his commodity. That is all he is expected to do. It has been recognized for years that this is a plan that should be followed in the matter of transportation of the mails. The basic principles of flat rate for reading matter and zone basis for advertisement now adopted should be studied by the Post Office Committee that it may more justly classify the rates which are to be permanent. I regret the increase made in first-class mail rates. It was unnecessary and is unjust.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much does this yield in revenue?

Mr. SLOAN. I can not, of course, give the precise figures, but it is conservatively estimated at an increase of $6,000,000. It is intended to be scaled according to the expense of carriage. It is not so much a matter of revenue, but it is placing the Government in relation to the publisher on a basis of value received.

It would have been a gracious act, perhaps, on the part of the House conferees, in view of the recent refusal of the Secretary of the Treasury and Congress to use the publications of the United States on a paid basis to advertise our great national loans, and the further fact that white paper has become so expensive and the Government seems powerless to control it, to have omitted this second-class rate change. However, the plan adopted is the best plan seriously presented and considered, except the so-called McKellar amendment in the Senate, once adopted by the Committee of the Whole and then rejected by the Senate.

I have no doubt that within two or three years, probably before this bill has gone into complete effect, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], who has just interrogated me, is a member, will have made a study of this and will have completed what ought to have been completed 10, 15, or 20 years ago, so that the carriage of mail throughout the United States will not be a money-making proposition. At the same time it will not be a money-losing proposition to the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the privilege of speaking to the House for 10 minutes upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am so profoundly impressed with the necessity for the speedy adoption of this conference report that I am only going to take a moment and that for the purpose of expressing my gratification at the triumphant vindication of the wisdom of this House in passing this bill. When the Committee on Ways and Means reported the bill to the House a storm of criticism from responsible, as well as irresponsible, sources arose. We were described as backwoods statesmen, and other very uncomplimentary epithets were hurled at us, and when the House substantially accepted the report of the Committee on Ways and Means you all were included in that general blanket characterization. It was freely predicted that when another body had had a chance at it we would not be able to recognize our own handiwork. But to-day, after another body has spent months in the consideration of this matter, we have confronting us, so far as the basic principles are concerned, practically the identical proposition for the enactment of which we were so bitterly criticized. It is true that a large increase has been made in the total of taxes to be raised, but that increase comes not from any new methods invented elsewhere, but through the readoption of the taxes imposed by the House, and an increase in the excess-profits tax, based not upon any new principles, but merely upon principles originally adopted by the House. When we exempt the provision with regard to the tariff tax, the 10 per cent duty on all imports, which no man here ever defended as a matter of principle, because a flat rate of 10 per cent on all imports can not be defended as a matter of principle either from the protective or the free-trade standpoint, and when we eliminate the retroactive tax on incomes, never defended here as a scientific proposition, there is practically not a change, so far as basic principle is concerned, in the bill as we passed it months ago and as it now comes before us as a result of the action of the conference committee. The bill is, in round numbers, about $600,000,000 higher than when we originally passed it, made necessary by increased demands upon the Treasury, and accomplished, as I have said, by the reestablishment of many of the House taxes and by a graduated increase in the excess-profits tax based upon the House principle.

As I have repeatedly said, I am personally opposed to the policy of raising so large a proportion of our war expenditures by taxes imposed on the present generation. As nearly as I can figure it, we are proposing now to raise about 40 per cent of our war expenditures by taxation and about 60 per cent by bonds. Personally, I would prefer that a small proportion of our war expenditures should be borne by the present generation. None of us know what those expenses will be, however, nor how much more money we will have to raise next year. So I am content, even though the proportion is a little higher than I myself would like, to give my emphatic support to this bill as it now comes before us. Of course, there are many things in it of which I do not approve, there are things in it which no Member of this House and no Member of another body entirely approves; but, gentlemen, we must each of us yield our individual views in times like these to the opinion of the majority. Do you not realize that it is an extraordinary thing that we have here a conference report upon a revenue bill upon which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] stand in agreement, as do the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINES] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and above all, that we have here a revenue measure upon which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are in accord. What could be better proof that we are all united when it comes to measures necessary for the defense of our country and the preservation of American ideals. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall yield to the gentleman if he will first let me yield to another gentleman. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET].

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Michigan has not any time to yield.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, what is the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary situation is that the gentleman from Michigan had an hour and has used that hour up.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I received recognition, and I ask for 10 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is only fair that we should have as much time on this side of the House as was consumed upon the other.

Mr. KITCHIN. How many gentlemen desire to talk?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have seven who desire from 5 to 10 minutes each.

Mr. KITCHIN. Can we not complete the debate in 30 minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin wants 10 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 40 minutes, to include in that 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate shall close in 40 minutes, and that out of that time the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] shall have 10 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] shall control the other 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The same request was made by Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. KREIDER, Mr. LONERGAN, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. FOSS, Mr. TOWNER, and Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that all who wish to extend their remarks on this bill be permitted to do so for the next five days.

The SPEAKER. Legislative or calendar?

Mr. FORDNEY. Legislative days, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen shall have the privilege of extending their remarks on this bill for five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will ask unanimous consent that they may extend their remarks for five calendar days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to make it five calendar days. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these individual Members who asked to extend their remarks?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, are the requests preferred to extend remarks upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. Well, there are half a dozen—

Mr. WALSH. Those are the ones I am referring to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana, Mr. ROBBINS, Mr. OSBORNE, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. PARKER of New Jersey, Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts, Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. HULL of Iowa, Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota, Mr. SIEGEL, Mr. SABATH, Mr. KEATING, Mr. CLAYPOOL, and Mr. HULL of Tennessee asked unanimous consent to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. FOCHT asked unanimous consent to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] a moment ago said that there are many things in this bill to which we can not all agree, and this he said in a casual way, as if all these things upon which we can not agree are of equal importance and of rather trifling character. But the gentleman is greatly mistaken. For, Mr. Speaker, this bill contains one of the most reactionary and important provisions that has been before the American Congress in 50 years. I refer to the provision for the establishment of a zone system for the carrying of mail. I observe gentlemen upon the other side of the aisle smiling incredulously at my last observation, and therefore, in support of my statement I beg to direct their attention to the opinion of a very distinguished man who, while governor of a State a few years ago, when an attempt was being made to have Congress establish the zone system, used the following forceful language:

It must be that those who are proposing this change of rate do not comprehend the effect it would have. A tax upon the business of the more widely circulated magazines and periodicals would be a tax upon their means of living and performing their functions. They obtain their circulation by their direct appeal to the popular thought. Their circulation attracts advertisers. Their advertisements enable them to pay their writers and to enlarge their enterprise and influence. This proposed new postal rate would be a direct tax, and a very serious one, upon the formation and expression of opinion—its more deliberate formation and expression just at a time when opinion is concerning itself actively and effectively with the deepest problems of our politics and our social life. To make such a change now, whatever its intentions in the minds of those who propose it, would be to attack and embarrass the free processes of opinion. Surely sober second thought will prevent any such mischievous blunder.

Now, it may interest gentlemen across the aisle to know that the distinguished person who thus powerfully denounced the proposal for a zone system was a Democrat by the name of Woodrow Wilson. [Applause.]

Never, until this afternoon, had I known of this opinion of Mr. Wilson's, and I trust that I may be pardoned if, after citing such an inspiring declaration, I refer to my own views and remind gentlemen that always, during the years of my service here, I have opposed efforts to establish a zone system. Frequently since I have been a Member of the House attempts have been made to enact a law to create such a system, a system that was thoroughly tried years ago, proven a failure, and discarded for the vastly better one of to-day. When the bill was originally before the House, last May, I spoke against the proposed zone system. Again, when two weeks ago, it came back from the Senate I spoke against it, and said that its effects would resemble those that would follow a supposed law restricting the circulation of the publications of California, Georgia, Wisconsin, Mississippi, Texas, or any other State to that State alone. Such a law as I have supposed would, of course, soon destroy everything like national spirit, bring upon the country the curse of sectionalism, and sow the seeds of inevitable disruption.

Now, a zone system, as I then said, would not confine circulation to a State but, as was intimated by this eminent Democratic governor—now President of the United States—it would sectionalize and harm the Republic because it would surely tend to restrict publications to zones.

There is no more reason for applying the zone system to newspapers and magazines than there would be to apply it to letters. We carry letters to the Philippines, and Porto Rico, and Alaska, and Panama, and the Hawaiian Islands, and all over the United States, for 2 cents, at a loss. But on grounds of high public policy we have been doing this and will continue to do it except as this report proposes to lessen the loss a little by raising letter postage to 3 cents. But, wisely, it is proposed not to have a zone system for letters but to retain for them a flat rate.

The greatest law to promote commerce and industry, which the United States has ever known, is, in my judgment, the law which established a low flat rate for the carrying of newspapers and magazines. No other country has ever witnessed such an astonishing growth in commerce and industry—in business generally—as has come to the United States since the zone system was abandoned and flat rates put in operation.

The press is the only business mentioned by name in the Constitution of the United States. It is not only different from any other business, but it is also more important than any other. It carries news and knowledge, and therefore newspapers, magazines, and periodicals ought to go everywhere throughout the national domain at cheap flat rates.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I regret that for lack of time I can not yield. I heard the gentleman's statement a moment ago, and I am trying as best I may to answer it and some of the other statements made during the debate. But being so restricted in time makes it impossible to present a consecutive argument with anything like proper sequence of ideas.

Gentlemen have risen here and said, "Rush this through. Let us get away on the train." And yet, in essential respects, nothing more important has come before this Congress than is this denationalizing provision. It is a denationalizing provision. Thoughts and ideas, and their dissemination broadcast throughout this country, as they have been disseminated under the law establishing flat rates, have done more to make us in sentiment a nation than did the Civil War itself. That postal law has in many ways done more than any other law ever passed by the Congress of the United States to make us in unity of purpose a nation. That law establishing cheap, flat rates for newspapers, magazines, and periodicals has been also beyond question our very greatest promoter of commerce and industry. These advertisements cause the writing of millions of letters, and thus, as the record of facts abundantly shows, lead at once to an enormous increase in the receipts of the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department would to-day be self-sustaining but for the rural free delivery. The Rural Free Delivery System does not in money pay for itself. But neither for that reason, nor for any other, should we give up, nor will we give up, rural free delivery. But you gentlemen who are so economical, who do not want, as you say, to "subsidize" newspapers and magazines, why is it that you do not propose to give up the Rural Free Delivery System, which is operated at a loss? Are there too many votes in it? Why do you propose to carry county papers all over the counties free? We all are in favor of that. It does a world of good. But why do you thus "subsidize" the county papers? Why do you "subsidize" the farmers, carry their mail at a loss, and carry the county papers at a loss?

I would not intimate that there were votes in that proposition. Far from it! It is statesmanship! [Laughter.] There is not a man here nor anywhere else that in a fair debate can defend a proposal for a zone system and carry it through Congress. It has been defeated and defeated when brought forward to stand or fall on its own merits. But now here it is in a conference report on a bill to raise the revenues necessary to thoroughly equip the Army and the Navy and carry on the war. And we must vote for the system or vote against the entire conference report. This sort of coercion over the votes of the House is wrong—absolutely, inexcusably wrong. This provision, if it had merit, ought to have been brought in here upon a Post Office bill. Let them bring it in on such a bill. Then let the friends of the zone system give the House two days of debate on this most important subject, and Members will take Woodrow Wilson's statement, together with the indisputable facts, as their text, elaborate upon it, and defeat any attempt to reestablish in this country the discarded zone system for the carrying of the mails. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DECKER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks I insert the following very effective statements of facts on this vastly important question. It may be appropriate in this connection to say that I have, neither directly nor indirectly, had any communication with any member of the Periodical Publishers' Association concerning the following articles. As these have appeared, I have read them and been impressed by their strength and clearness, and therefore I asked leave to insert them in the record of this debate:

It is repeated so often that magazines cause the post office a loss of $89,000,000 a year that many have come to accept it as a fact instead of a tradition; another set of figures makes the loss $40,000,000; a third guesses some entirely different figure.

The advocates of the present zone proposal are saying in Congress that although newspapers pay their way at 1 cent a pound, magazines cause a loss of $89,000,000, from which it would follow that newspapers cost the post office only 1 cent a pound and magazines 33 cents a pound. The post-office figures, on the other hand, say that magazines and trade journals cost less than newspapers by 0.23 of a cent per pound, on account of the greater number of pieces of newspaper mail that must be handled for each cent of revenue, and in spite of an admitted longer average haul of magazines.

Leaving for a moment this welter of contradictions, let us look at what has actually happened to the post-office revenues as a result of the pound-rate system.

WHAT MAGAZINE MAIL HAS DONE TO THE POST-OFFICE REVENUES.

The following figures are made up from the annual reports of the Postmaster General:

In the year 1870 there was a deficit in the Post Office operations of 21.4 per cent of its turnover.

In 1879 was passed the act putting second-class matter on the pound-rate basis, and cutting down radically the amount the subscriber had to pay as postage on his periodical. An immediate increase in the volume of second-class mail began.

In 1880 the Post Office deficit was only 9.6 per cent of its turnover.

In 1885 was passed the law making the pound rate 1 cent instead of 2. Congress did it on its own initiative, without even a suggestion from any publisher. It was done on the theory that the national dissemination of literature should be encouraged, and with the hope that the greater volume of second-class mail resulting, with all the collateral Post Office patronage accompanying a greater volume, would help to modify the effect of so low a rate on the Post Office revenues. The volume came. Second-class mail trebled in the decade ending with 1890. The next decade brought a phenomenal increase—from 170,053,910 pounds in 1890 to no less than 382,538,999 pounds in 1900.

The deficit in Post Office operations in the year 1900 was only 5.2 per cent.

In the prosperous years following 1900 the increase in second-class matter was stupendous—from 382,538,999 pounds in 1900 to 488,246,903 pounds in 1902, only two years. These years brought the great forward movement in the production of low-priced but well-edited magazines.

In 1901 the Post Office deficit was only 3.41 per cent of its business. In 1902 the deficit was 2.4 per cent.

This was the smallest percentage of deficit in 18 years, and the smallest, but two, in 57 years.

But mark: The year 1902 would have shown no deficit at all but for a new item of expense, $4,000,000 for rural free delivery.

Our Government had wisely and beneficently extended the service of the Post Office to farmers in isolated communities, regardless of any commensurate return from that branch. The report of the Postmaster General for 1902 says: "It will be seen that had it not been for the large expenditure on account of rural free delivery the receipts would have exceeded the expenditures by upward of $1,000,000."

Since 1902 there has each year been a handsome surplus in the operations of the Post Office outside of the expenditures of the Government for rural free delivery.

In 1916 the Post Office reports a surplus of $5,929,236.07, which, added to the loss wisely and deliberately taken on the Rural Free Delivery Service, shows a real profit as compared with the years before this aid was given to the agricultural districts of more than $50,000,000.

This, then, is the terrible effect of the pound rate for second-class mail and of the consequent increase of magazines and other second-class matter; this is the result of the "shameless subsidy" of the $89,000,000 a year loss caused by the magazines; that from 1879 to 1916, with second-class mail increasing from 51,000,000 pounds annually to 1,200,000,000 pounds annually the former regular huge annual deficits of the Post Office have come down with each increase of second-class mail until surpluses have taken the place of deficits, and there has been $50,000,000 a year in addition to aid rural life.

This evidence has not been used in Congress or by the National One-Cent Letter Postage Association.

Does it help to substantiate the "$89,000,000 loss caused by the magazines" myth?

Is it evidence on which magazines ought to be strangled by a sudden increase of more than 300 per cent in their cost of delivery to subscribers?

MAGAZINES ARE THE MOST PROFITABLE CUSTOMERS OF THE POST OFFICE.

1. Through huge purchases of stamps entirely outside of their pound-rate payments.

The name of a representative magazine has been given to Members of Congress with the following facts of its most recent four months' operation:

It paid the Post Office during these four months for delivery to subscribers $8,676.04.

But during the same period it purchased 2-cent stamps to the amount of $20,202.06.

It purchased 1-cent stamps to the amount of $24,255.49.

It paid parcel-post charges of $3,196.20.

Here are direct purchases from the Post Office, entirely apart from its pound-rate payments, amounting for four months to $56,329.79.

The above was for outgoing mail matter.

Incoming showed for the 4 months 258,272 sealed letters with postage stamps affixed, in addition to post cards and parcel post deliveries.

So far we have payments, in only four months, to the Post Office of $61,495.23, over and above the pound-rate payments of $8,676.04, in transacting the direct business of the magazine.

But in addition, during these four months, 800 advertisers spent $99,800.85 in this magazine for advertisements appealing to the people of the entire country. How could these 800 business men get back their $99,800 investment except by operations requiring the purchase of hundreds of thousands of additional 2-cent stamps?

Is it a good thing for the Nation's revenues to strangle this publisher's business? Even if the question of fairness to him be dismissed, after he has built up a business through 25 years, delicately adjusted to a 1 cent pound rate, is it good business for the Post Office suddenly to more than quadruple his freight rate and cut down or destroy his activities?

2. Through the vast amount of postage generated by magazine advertising:

About $75,000,000 is invested annually in magazine advertising; about $400,000,000 in newspapers and periodicals other than magazines.

Here is the postage bill of one of the great "mail-order" magazine advertisers—a company selling excellent clothing to women who have not access to the great cities and their department stores. The president of the company writes:

"Our business is derived entirely, either directly or indirectly, from our magazine advertising. During the year we paid the Post Office Department for carrying our first, third, and fourth class mail matter the sum of $433,242."

What a single advertisement in one issue of a magazine did for another women's "wearing apparel" house is recorded on their books as follows:

"The postage required to answer the 15,000 replies from the one-column insertion in the magazine, also to send the merchandise required by 2,000 of the inquirers and to 'follow up' other inquirers, was $5,400."

The Government charge for carrying this advertisement was $38.83. (That $5,400, by the way, did not include the several hundred dollars spent on postage by the inquirers themselves.)

The president of a concern publishing encyclopedias, natural histories, classics, etc., investigated the correspondence created by a recent page of his advertising inserted in a single magazine:

"The stamps and money orders bought by the inquirers and the publisher, as a result of the 4,000 inquiries to this one advertisement, amounted to $884."

The publishers paid the post office to carry that page, at second-class rates, $12. A good business man would be satisfied to lose several times $12 in order to do $884 worth of business as profitable to him as first-class mail is to the Government.

Scores of small advertisers are found in any issue of any popular magazine. They are just as good customers of the post office, in proportion, as the big concerns using columns of pages.

A modest 1-inch magazine advertisement is printed by a company which reports that its yearly postage bill from that cause is $5,132. Adding the approximate postage on the 1,500 letters a month sent to the company, the yearly total of postage created by this inconspicuous concern through the magazines is found to be $5,492.

Two quarter-column announcements of a dress fabric appealing to women, in a single magazine, brought 7,000 replies, involving postage stamps worth $230.

Pretty good business getters for the department, these "ads," which cost the publishers to mail at second-class rates $19.40.

Even better in proportion was a one-fifth column appeal to mothers in one issue of the same magazine. It produced postage to the amount of $240.

To carry the little advertisement at second-class rates the Government charged $7.76.

A single-column magazine "ad" of a Chicago clothing firm, with a number of retail stores over the country, brought 4,000 inquiries, which, with follow up, etc., caused postage of $380.

That column cost the publisher to mail at second-class rates $38.67.

The Woman's Home Companion sent a letter to the advertisers in a November issue asking for an exact memorandum of the letter postage on the inquiries from their November advertising, and the answers to these inquiries. Seventy-five advertisers reported with definite figures an aggregate letter-postage expenditure of $3,885.90.

The Woman's Home Companion paid the Government just $583 for carrying the portion of the magazine on which these 75 advertisements were printed.

Any advertising man can point to hundreds of "mail-order firms" like the above. These firms can trace directly to their magazine advertising every year purchases of millions of dollars' worth of the stamps that make big profits for the Post Office.

It is even more surprising to learn the enormous postage bills caused by an entirely different class of magazine advertisers—the "general publicity" or "national" advertisers—who wish the reader to ask for their fine soaps, or mattresses, or silks, or stationery at his local store. These firms do not depend on direct replies, yet they receive so many that thousands of dollars are spent for stamps per year in scores of cases—even per month in many.

A moderate-priced shoe is sold through a number of retail stores in different cities. The manufacturers advertise in magazines for national "publicity," to bring buyers into these stores. Incidentally they mention their department to fill orders by mail. Thus an enormous correspondence has been built up, of which the average increase alone during the last three years has involved 264,000 first-class letters—a minimum postage of $5,280. This is simply one yearly addition to the company's already large first-class business, of which it writes that "all but a nominal percentage" has been "induced" by our magazine advertisements.

More than $15,000 is spent annually for postage by a mattress manufacturer, "following up" inquiries received from his magazine advertising, though that is designed to create a demand for the mattress at local furniture stores.

This $15,000 is entirely over and above his steady correspondence with dealers, etc., which was built up in the first place by magazine advertising.

One of the many recent "contests" conducted by magazine advertisers was that of a stationery company. Theirs is also "publicity," not mail-order, advertising. It is designed to create a demand for their paper over the stationery-store counters. But their "contest," announced exclusively in the magazines, brought 50,000 replies, which with follow-up, etc., averaged 12 cents first-class postage—a total of $7,080 in one month.

Magazine advertisements of a popular cold cream brought 170,000 letters to the manufacturers last year, though the controlling purpose of the campaign was to get the public to ask for that kind of cold cream at the drug stores.

Not including postal orders, special delivery stamps, etc., the stamp revenue to the Government from those letters was $8,500.

And, of course, that does not include the profuse correspondence between the manufacturers, the jobbers, the drug stores all over the country, and so on.

For another facial preparation a single advertisement in a leading weekly magazine brought more than 13,000 replies. The stamps involved here add up to $990.

The publishers paid the Post Office to carry this advertisement at the second-class rate $48.83.

In the first part of this advertisement the figures in the reports of the Postmaster General are used to show how, instead of ruining the post office, magazines and other second-class mail have increased enormously in volume along with a revolutionary change in post-office finances from huge annual losses to huge annual profits.

These few examples out of millions of post-office transactions caused by magazine advertising enable you to understand why the magazines have been a boon to the post-office revenues.

Is this the kind of testimony to justify death sentence on magazines "because they cause a loss to the post office of $89,000,000 per year"?

THE PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION
(Comprising publications with aggregate circulations of more than 25,000,000 per issue).

The publishers of magazines have never protested and do not now protest against any proposed war taxes that affect all business men alike.

They are willing and anxious to pay any excess-profits taxes, income taxes—any and all that Congress sees fit to levy. Scores of them have offered to give all their profits while the war lasts.

They do protest with all their power against a hasty and ill-considered special device of postal legislation, zone bill, under the guise of tax raising, which unfairly singles out virtually only 23 per cent of publishers to be specially taxed, the class already most burdened, and demands from scores of these, not a 5 per cent tax on profits, not a 60 per cent tax on merely the excess profits of war times, but much more than all the profits coming from these publications.

The conferees have under consideration in the revenue bill a modification of the defeated Senate amendment, changing the 1 cent a pound postal rate for second-class mail to a zone system, making no increases in the first zones up to 250 miles, and increasing the present rate on part of the periodicals no less than 900 per cent for the far southern and western sections of the United States. The introduction of the defeated Senate zone bill was accompanied by a statement from a group of newspaper publishers, who are scarcely affected by the proposed system, undertaking to prove that newspapers carried at 1 cent a pound caused no loss to the post office and charging magazines alone with causing the mythical and traditional $89,000,000 loss.

The effect of this zone system is virtually to leave the rate on most newspapers as it was and to multiply by more than three the average rate on nationally circulated periodicals and magazines.

Many worthy magazines would be destroyed. The industry would be revolutionized, with the half dozen of the strongest periodicals with the largest advertising patronage helped toward a monopoly.

The proposed measure substitutes for the Senate Finance Committee's carefully considered refusal to raise rates at this time an average increase of more than 200 per cent so cunningly distributed by the antiquated and provincial zone system that it exempts the newspapers and falls entirely on the nationally circulated magazines and business and technical papers. The Post Office Department's figures show these, including trade journals, to make up only 23 per cent of the second-class mail. These would pay 98 per cent of the tax.

SAMPLES OF THE "EVIDENCE."

Below are samples of the testimony presented by the advocates of the zone system and a small group of newspaper publishers, which did not include any of the large city dailies:

(1) That magazines, but not newspapers, are responsible for "an annual deficit reported by the Post Office Department of $50,000,000."

The Postmaster General's report shows for the past year a surplus of $5,000,000 even after a loss of $50,000,000 for Rural Free Delivery Service.

(2) It was explained why newspapers should be charged less than magazines (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD): "There is a wide difference in the cost of transporting heavy trade journals, immense numbers of Saturday Evening Posts, and magazines of that character and the cost of transporting newspapers. It is a different kind of paper. It is not so heavy and the cost of transportation is less."

The Senator's evidence seems to be that a pound of magazines weighs more than a pound of newspapers.

If you were a grocer would you rather deliver four quarter pounds of sugar to four different addresses or 1 pound of sugar to one address?

(3) It is claimed in Congress that the Post Office Department loses $89,000,000 yearly on second-class mail, but that newspapers do not contribute to this loss, and many figures are presented to show that 1 cent a pound is about the cost for newspapers, leaving the entire claimed $89,000,000 loss to be produced by the "heavy" magazines.

The magazines and business journals together make up only 23 per cent of the second-class mail (H. Doc. 559, p. 144), which weighs altogether about 12,000,000 pounds, so that if there is a total cost in excess of receipts of $89,000,000, the magazines must be costing the Government 32 cents a pound, as against 1 cent for the newspapers.

But the Hughes Commission, after studying the figures an entire summer, reported that there is "no basis for the conclusion that the comparative cost of transporting and handling would justify a difference in rate" (between magazines and newspapers), and again: "These figures furnish no sufficient foundation for a discrimination in rates between newspapers and periodicals."

And the Post Office Department's own figures state definitely that newspapers cost the Post Office more per pound than magazines, in spite of their shorter haul (owing to the handling cost being a larger factor than the pure transportation cost, and since newspapers have more than four times as many pieces to the pound as magazines).

Is this the kind of testimony to pass a death sentence on? Testimony to the effect that magazines cost the Government 33 times as much as newspapers, when the Post Office figures, the only ones to be had, show that a pound of magazines is less costly to the Post Office than a pound of newspapers?

(4) The defeated Senate amendment promised additional revenue of $12,600,000 from this death-dealing amendment. What were the facts?

Even assuming that all the circulation of all the magazines would remain with a far southern and western freight rate increased 500 per cent, the automatic exemption through the zone system of 98 per cent of newspaper circulation and the further arbitrary exemption of agricultural, religious, and certain other papers would have brought the new rates entirely on the magazines. At the present rate of 1 cent a pound they produce post-office revenue of $2,760,000. An average addition of 2.08 cents a pound would amount to $5,740,000, not $12,600,000, a further sample of the accuracy of the testimony offered to support this attack on publishers.

But even this is on the supposition that magazines, already struggling for their lives on account of war prices for paper, could stand an increase of 500 per cent on their carrying charges to nearly one-third of the United States. The measure is destructive and would produce no increase in revenue at all or anything but destruction.

(5) The author of the Senate amendment complained that in Mr. Taft's administration a postal commission, "the chairman of which was no less a person than the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, was appointed to investigate, and did investigate and made a report. Nothing was done."

The Senator did not, however, add that the Hughes Commission exposed the fallacy of every single proposal and set of figures advanced in support of this zone system and now again under consideration, and that it utterly condemned any zone system of postal rates whatsoever.

Of the many commissions provided by Congress to study the problems of second-class mail rates the last, and a very distinguished one, was composed of Charles E. Hughes, then justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University; and Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Chicago.

Dealing with the question of a zone system, this commission spoke as follows (H. Doc. 559, p. 140):

"The policy of zone rates was pursued in the earlier history of our post office and has been given up in favor of a uniform rate in view of the larger interests of the Nation as a whole. It would seem to the commission to be entirely impracticable to attempt to establish a system of zone rates for second-class matter."

This was the latest commission. The next latest was the Penrose-Overstreet Joint Commission of Congress on second-class matter, which held voluminous hearings in 1906. On page 28 of the report of this commission the zone rate system is considered as follows:

"Neither, for reasons almost equally obvious, is a solution to be found in a zone system of charges . . . which would artificially restrict the diffusion of the periodical agencies of intelligence. . . . Would it not be politically and socially unwise to create arbitrary barriers against the processes of national unification and solidarity?"

"Apart from the social and political considerations, which to our minds are conclusive, there are serious administrative difficulties in the way of a zone system of charges."

Thus we have the two distinguished commissions on second-class mail of recent years, the only two, both deciding flatly against the zone system.

These are the kinds of testimony on which a portion of the publishing industry has been picked out for death sentence.

We demand that any changes in the second-class postal rates affecting vitally a body of reputable business men be made by a commission with time, training, and expert knowledge to do the work fairly, wisely, and intelligently.

There have been two commissions in this century; the Congressmen advocating destructive zone systems are paying no attention to the findings of these commissions. Moreover, conditions have radically changed; now the magazines are transported by freight instead of fast, expensive mail trains, and they do a large part of the work originally done by the Post Office.

PROOF OF THE DESTRUCTION.

The statement below shows the total net profits of 86 periodicals of general circulation, compared with the postage they are asked to pay under the zone measure now proposed:

Number of periodicals as printed below	86
Aggregate average circulation per issue in 1916	21,264,404
Total amount of postage paid in 1916 at 1 cent a pound	$1,243,465.99
Amount of postage per year demanded by the proposed zone measure, about	$5,000,000.00
Total addition to pound-rate charge per year on new proposed basis	$3,756,534.01
Total net profits of all publications for year 1916	$1,197,403.73

These periodicals have not been selected because they were horrible examples. They are representative of the rank and file of American periodicals.

List of publications furnishing figures for consolidated accounts reported by Price, Waterhouse & Co. and printed above: The Gentlewoman, McCall's Magazine, Woman's Home Companion, American Magazine, Farm and Fireside, Every Week, Pictorial Review, McClure's, Collier's Weekly, Farm and Home, The Modern Priscilla, Metropolitan, Leslie's Weekly, Judge, Film Fun, People's Home Journal, Mothers' Magazine, Christian Herald, Motion Picture Magazine, Ladies' World, National Sportsman, Motion Picture Classic, Field and Stream, Smart Set, Popular Science Monthly, Photo Play, Puck, Yachting, Outing, All Outdoors, Theatre Magazine, Municipal Journal, World's Work, The New Country Life, Garden Magazine, Short Stories, Travel, American Penman, Current Opinion, Harper's Magazine, American Art News, Orange Judd Weeklies (5), Weekly, Monthly, and Quarterly Religious Publications (35), Vogue, Vanity Fair, House and Garden, Outer's Book, Spare Moments.

The case is made harder by the fact that these magazines are forced to pay in 1917 75 per cent more for their paper than in 1916, and some of the best of them are, irrespective of postal charges, struggling for existence. In such cases the proposed rates would certainly end the struggle.

It is not difficult for even a layman to understand why such a sudden change would disrupt an industry when he considers:

(1) That hundreds of the general shippers of the United States have shown they could not stand an increase of even 15 per cent in their freight rates.

(2) That the proposed zone measure would increase the magazines' freight rates of 1 cent a pound, which they have had for 32 years, and to which their whole business had been delicately adjusted, by more than 200 per cent.

The group of southern and southeastern newspapers which originally arranged for the introduction of the zone system and supported it with a lengthy statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, protested violently and with some justice against a special war tax of 5 per cent on the profits of publishers. Then they turn around and obtain this, requiring the magazines to pay from 30 to 300 per cent of their profits, with a device that would virtually exempt themselves.

How can a publisher pay more than 100 per cent of his profits?

Why should one class of publishers be hastily relieved from paying a special 5 per cent of their profits and another class be immediately required to pay a special tax amounting in many instances to more than all their profits?

THE PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION
(Comprising publications with aggregate circulations
of more than 25,000,000 per issue).

It was repeatedly stated in Congress that publishers are enjoying an $89,000,000 subsidy from the Government. It was claimed, however, that this annual so-called loss on second-class mail was not caused by the newspapers, because, on account of their short haul, they can be handled by the post office without loss at 1 cent a pound.

This is the basic reason for introducing a zone schedule of second-class mail rates that would practically exempt from any increase most of the newspapers and arbitrarily exempt certain other classes of publications, but which would increase the rates on magazines and business journals (their freight rate from producer to consumer) more than 300 per cent over the rate on which their business has been built up through 32 years.

If it is true that the magazines are causing the post office this loss of $89,000,000, then it is costing the Government 33 cents a pound to handle them, as against 1 cent a pound to handle the newspapers.

What does the Post Office Department itself say?

Turn to House document 559, page 144, of the Report of the Hughes Commission.

Here Justice Charles E. Hughes and his associates publish the figures presented by the Post Office Department showing that magazines and trade journals cost the post office 0.27 of 1 cent less per pound than newspapers cost (instead of thirty-three times as much)!

Also that newspapers cost the post office in that year $31,758,836, while magazines cost $13,598,445.

If the total cost of magazines to the post office is $13,000,000, how can "$89,000,000" of it, or "$60,000,000" of it, or "$40,000,000" of it, be loss?

Bear in mind these are the Post Office Department's own figures; we have had nothing to do with them except to copy them from the report of Justice Hughes's Commission which got them from the post office (H. Doc. 559, p. 144).

But changes have come since 1910 that would alter these figures.

Yes; they have; important changes.

The magazines are now carried on freight trains by a service vastly less expensive to the post office, while newspapers are still given the same expensive fast service that all second-class mail enjoyed when these figures were made up by the Government.

It is further stated in Congress, to defend the exemption of newspapers through a zone system of rates, that newspapers are largely "made up" and routed at the publishing offices, with the implication that magazines are sent out without such handling services performed by the publisher.

The fact: Magazines are given the same treatment by their publishers, except that theirs goes much further than with newspapers, because the larger volume of mail circulation per issue makes it possible to make up a much larger proportion of the circulation.

Less than 6 per cent of the New York World circulation goes through the mails. (Testimony of the publishers before the Overstreet commission.)

Over 85 per cent of the Outlook's, the Scientific American's, the Literary Digest's, the Independent's, and the Review of Reviews' circulation goes through the mails.

Yet, although the Government itself gives the figures showing that newspaper mail costs it more per pound than magazine mail, the zone advocates want to more than treble the rates for the magazines, dealing many of them a mortal blow, and exempt the higher-costing part, the newspapers, whose profits would be only slightly affected.

It is true that magazines are carried farther ("average haul") than newspapers.

Ought reputable publishers to be driven out of business because some Congressmen have found that the average haul of magazines is longer than the average haul of newspapers, but have not found, although the same Post Office Department reports give it, that owing to the greater number of pieces of newspaper to the pound and consequent greater handling charges, the total cost of service to a pound of newspapers is greater than to a pound of magazines?

The zone system of second-class mail rates before Congress is not a war tax. It is a very ill-considered piece of postal legislation that would prevent many publishers from paying any war taxes by stopping their business.

We want to pay our war taxes—all of them that are laid on businesses and individuals.

If we are to pay them, Congress must look again at the testimony on which it is proposed to take from certain publishers more than they have.

We ask that any postal legislation be deferred until better evidence can be obtained, and we offer to help any competent commission appointed by Congress or the President obtain it.

THE PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION
(Comprising publications with aggregate circulations
of more than 25,000,000 per issue).

WHY A ZONE SYSTEM ON ADVERTISING, OR A ZONE SYSTEM AT ALL?

The zone system has been condemned by both our recent eminent postal commissions. The Hughes Commission of 1912 (Charles E. Hughes, President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, and Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Chicago) dealt with the matter as follows:

THE HUGHES COMMISSION'S DECISION.

"The policy of zone rates was pursued in the earlier history of our Post Office and has been given up in favor of a uniform rate in view of the larger interests of the Nation as a whole. It would seem to the commission to be entirely impracticable to attempt to establish a system of zone rates for second-class matter."

This was the latest commission. The next latest was the Penrose-Overstreet Joint Commission of Congress on Second-Class Matter, which held voluminous hearings in 1906. On page 28 of the report of this commission the zone-rate principle is considered as follows:

THE PENROSE-OVERSTREET COMMISSION'S DECISION.

"Neither, for reasons almost equally obvious, is a solution to be found in a zone system of charges . . . which would artificially restrict the diffusion of the periodical agencies of intelligence. . . . Would it not be politically and socially unwise to create arbitrary barriers against the processes of national unification and solidarity?"

"Apart from the social and political considerations, which to our mind are conclusive, there are serious administrative difficulties in the way of a zone system of charges."

WOODROW WILSON ON THE LAST PROPOSAL TO CHARGE HIGHER RATES ON MAGAZINE ADVERTISING.

In an interview given on the occasion of the last effort to increase radically the postal rate on the advertising sections of magazines, Woodrow Wilson, then governor of New Jersey, was quoted as saying:

"It must be that those who are proposing this change of rates do not comprehend the effect it would have. A tax upon the business of the more widely circulated magazines and periodicals would be a tax upon their means of living and performing their functions."

"They obtain their circulation by their direct appeal to the popular thought. Their circulation attracts advertisers. Their advertisements enable them to pay their writers and to enlarge their enterprise and influence."

"This proposed new postal rate would be a direct tax, and a very serious one, upon the formation and expression of opinion—its more deliberate formation and expression just at a time when opinion is concerning itself actively and effectively with the deepest problems of our politics and our social life."

"To make such a change now, whatever its intentions in the minds of those who propose it, would be to attack and embarrass the free processes of opinion. Surely sober second thought will prevent any such mischievous blunder."

Why, then, are magazine publishers, at the time of their greatest need, faced with destruction by a high-zone system postal increase on their advertising, supplemented by a further postal increase on their reading matter?

The Senate considered these proposals, gave hearings to the publishers, saw the futility, injustice, and destructiveness of the zone measure, and eliminated all postal increases from the revenue bill.

Mr. Kitchin, in the House, has refused any hearings, and has forced the measure through.

With all the authorities to whom Congress would look and the most eminent that have ever passed on the subject, solidly arrayed against this radical innovation, why should a zone system, increasing the postal charges to the far West and South by 900 per cent, now be decided on?

Is it considered more expedient to increase the rates on magazines and leave the newspapers practically untouched, which is automatically accomplished by such a zone arrangement?

But see what the Hughes Commission has to say after many months of study of the absolute and relative costs to the post office of the several subclasses of second-class mail matter (H. Doc. 559, p. 144):

"The commission is further of the opinion that it would be a mistake to discriminate between newspapers and magazines or other periodicals. So far as educational value is concerned no satisfactory distinction can be made. And we have no basis for the conclusion that the comparative cost of transporting and handling would justify a difference in rate."

And again (H. Doc. 559, p. 145):

"These figures are the only basis we have for judgment as to the comparative cost of transporting and handling the different kinds of publications above mentioned, and it is evident that they furnish no sufficient foundation for a discrimination in rates between newspapers and periodicals."

We have recited the testimony furnished by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on which a part of the magazine industry has been sentenced to death.

We protest against a measure of utter destructiveness, not claimed by its advocates to have any reference to revenue-raising, which flatly repudiates every expert report and opinion, every eminent authority that has given study to the matter.

Are Congress and the President willing to look at this testimony and make these postal changes into law?

THE PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION
(Comprising publications with aggregate circulations
of more than 25,000,000 per issue).

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the House is impatient to vote on this report, and I will delay it but a moment. A Member of the minority just now is in a peculiar position. If he expresses the criticisms which he feels, and opposes a bill as objectionable, he is charged with being partisan and unpatriotic. And if, on the other hand, he acquiesces in the measures brought before us, then his very assent is heralded as proof of the merits of the bills and of the infallibility of those who present them.

Take this bill, for instance. There are many things in it to which I am thoroughly opposed and which I think are unwise, unfair, and unequal. The gentleman from Illinois has just mentioned one of them. In ordinary times I certainly would not vote for it. I should wish to both criticize and oppose it. I would not vote for it when it passed the House before. But I appreciate that these are not ordinary times. I appreciate that the one thing necessary for us to do is to provide money immediately for prosecuting this war and to win the war, and that to do that we of the minority must swallow our scruples and our partisanship and repress criticisms, although they may be deep-seated and numerous. We must unite and give all our strength to the administration. That I have tried to do, and shall continue to do.

I am of opinion that this bill does not raise too much money, compared with the bonds that we issue. I am disposed to think that it is the best compromise to which the majority of the Senate and the majority of the House can come on a revenue bill at this time. And therefore, objecting as I do to many of its features, yet I feel that it is my duty to vote for this conference report, and I shall vote for it with the hope that this revenue and the appropriations that are made from it may adequately support our armies and speedily bring us to our normal condition of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if there is anyone who is entirely satisfied with this bill, and practically all of those who have to pay taxes under it will have some criticism of its provisions. And yet the most that can be said against and in criticism of the tax provisions of the act is that they may be excessive; that they may be somewhat inequitable in levying upon the property of the citizen in paying the necessary expenses of the war. That is the most that can be said in criticism of any of the tax provisions of the bill.

There is a provision of the bill, however, against which a much stronger and more vital objection, criticism, and indictment can be laid. That is the provision of the bill which proposes to revolutionize the system established more than half a century ago in this country, and since adopted by practically all of the civilized nations of the world, for the wide and general distribution and dissemination of literature, opinion, news, and information, under a low and uniform rate for newspapers and magazines carried through the mails. This bill proposes a radical, a revolutionary, and, in my opinion, an infinitely harmful departure from that system; and it proposes to do it not in a reasonable way, if there be any reasonable way, but in a way which will be trying, troublesome, and infinitely vexatious to the publishers.

I am not so much interested, however, in the matter from the standpoint of the newspaper and magazine publishers as I am primarily from the standpoint of the American people. I am interested in it in view of my belief that it will tend to denationalize our magazines, our newspapers, and make them sectional, local, parochial, provincial. In the running of the years such a zone system as is proposed will do more to break down a broad and growing spirit of nationalism, which should be encouraged, than anything in the way of legislation that could possibly be written upon the statute books.

I feel so strongly in regard to this matter that if it were possible at this time to have it considered on its merits I should offer a motion to recommit the bill, with instructions to strike out all the provisions relative to the zone system governing second-class mail matter; but the House is so anxious to pass this bill, and it is of such very great importance that it be passed speedily, that the matter would not be considered on its merits, and therefore I shall not offer such a motion.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have faith and confidence in the American Congress, even though one of its committees has so grievously erred, as I feel the committee has in this matter, and I am confident that when the people realize the exceedingly harmful tendencies and effects of treating the distribution of news and opinions, the dissemination of ideas, as we treat the shipment of bacon and beans, we shall have a reversal of the action taken to-day, and that we shall return, long before the period when this legislation will be in full operation, to the old system under which we have had a nation-wide dissemination of ideas and opinions, of information and news. A free press is essential to the maintenance of free institutions, and a free press can not perform its perfect work unless its distribution be nation wide, unhampered and unvexed by the restrictive and medieval zone system which certain sections of this bill establishes. [Applause.]

I am profoundly of the opinion that our country can not continue to grow and develop as a great, free, enlightened, and homogeneous people unless we shall continue to have the widest possible circulation of newspapers and magazines, and we can not have such a distribution under a system like the one proposed, under which newspapers and magazines will be largely restricted to the locality of their publication.

The plan proposed is unfair to the newspapers and magazines. It is clumsy and unscientific in its details, will be cumbersome and vexatious in its operation; but it is infinitely more unfair to the people of many sections of the country, and would eventually, if it were continued, tend to make us a people sectional, local, and provincial in our views. I shall never cease to fight in favor of a system truly national in its scope and purpose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I shall take the time of the House only a few minutes, though it seems to me that a bill of such tremendous importance and of such great complication should be much more thoroughly explained and debated. Few Members understand it. In some respects it flies in the face of all precedents and in the face of the advice of the greatest experts on taxation in this and other countries. We are beginning the war with too high a percentage of taxation, far higher than any other nation has thought wise. It is a dangerous experiment.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. KITCHIN], in answering a question from me, said a little while ago that the income surtaxes were so high in this bill that if the war should last another year, as it probably will, when we are compelled to raise still more revenue, we shall have to increase the normal tax and add consumption taxes on tea and coffee. I think there is danger that such a policy might make the war unpopular just when it might be of most vital importance to have every possible support—in the second year. I think we should start on a policy that would enable us to raise rates a little all around next year. That would be more scientific, would produce less interference with business, would conserve instead of destroy some important sources of revenue.

The income surtaxes are above the line of safety, while some important sources of revenue that would be entirely safe have been omitted—the bank-check tax, for instance. Probably the normal income tax should be at least 1 per cent higher and the $3,000 and $4,000 exemption should have been repealed entirely, instead of being lowered to $1,000 and $2,000 for this bill while left in the old law, if it is left. Nobody but a Philadelphia lawyer can tell just what that section of the bill means as it stands.

The excess-profits section as finally adopted seems to me somewhat better as finally agreed upon than in either the House or Senate bills, but it is crude and altogether too evidently a compromise. The comparison finally provided for with profits of 1911, 1912, and 1913 is complicated and practically useless. The section is not at all like the English tax, of which it is supposed to be an imitation. I see no good reason for including individuals and requiring them to file two sets of returns and pay two kinds of taxes. The individual income tax was sufficient to cover profits of individuals in business. Nor do I see any reason for considering interest on bonds—liberty bonds or others—as “profits.”

The zone system of raising second-class postage rates seems to me wholly bad, but not so bad as in the bill originally passed in the House.

On the whole the bill may be 55 or 60 per cent good, and with considerable doubt I shall vote for it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is here and desires to use the time, I agreed to give him two minutes. If not, I wish to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I have no more requests for time. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to extend my remarks in the Record by printing some things that I read and some others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DECKER). The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it, and the conference report is unanimously agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. RUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record, to include the publication of a very patriotic editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record, and to include a patriotic editorial. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, October 2, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:
